Truman Veto Of Tax Bill Tomorrow Is Predicted

President Working On Message But Still Is Undecided On Labor Measure

By Felix Cotten
International News Service Staff Writer

President Truman will veto the Republican-sponsored tax cut bill tomorrow and restate his belief that any Government revenue surplus should be applied to reduction of the 257 billion dollars public debt.

Sources close to the White House said, however, that he had made no decision as to what action he will take on the labor regulation bill.

The President's Cabinet is reported to be divided on the labor bill, with some urging a veto and others insisting that the measure should be signed.

The deadline for action on the tax measure expires tomorrow at midnight.

White House Press Secretary Charles G. Ross said the President's "tax action will come tomorrow."

Working on Message

"There will be a message in any case, whether he vetoes or signs," he added. "The President is now working on the message and will spend a good part of the afternoon on it."

He explained that action would not be taken on the labor bill until later in the week. The President has 10 days, not including Sundays and holidays, to act on legislation after it has been passed by Congress.

Chairman Knutson (R., Minn.) of the House Ways and Means Committee said the House would take up the tax bill veto message Tuesday. He predicted that the chamber would pass the bill over the veto.

Senate May Act Wednesday

In that case, the Senate plans to call up the veto message Wednesday. GOP chiefs concede that the Senate probably will sustain a tax bill veto, since the final Senate vote on passage fell short of the two thirds majority necessary to override.

Knutson declared a tax bill veto would indicate that the President intended to sign the labor bill. He said:

"If he sends up veto messages on both these bills in one week, his name will be 'finis' in 1948."

The President has until Friday midnight to act on the labor bill and indications are he will take the full time allowed him. That would mean that if the bill is vetoed, a message will be sent to Congress on that date.

Postmaster General Hannegan is reported to be urging the President to veto the labor bill along with Labor Secretary Schwellenbach and Interior Secretary Krug.

Clark Clifford, special aid to the President, is said to be recommending a veto.

Worsham, Snead Tie in Open; Play-Off Today

Lew Worsham, 29-year-old Bethesda professional, and Sammy Snead, Hot Springs, Va., finished with 282 for 72 holes in the National Open championship at St. Louis yesterday and will stage an 18-hole playoff this morning.

Snead, British Open champion, holed a 20-foot putt on the seventy-second hole to tie Worsham. Neither has won the championship before. Their score of 282 is two below par and one stroke higher than the tournament record.

Bobby Locke, South Africa, and Ed Oliver, Wilmington, Del., tied for third with 285s.

Denounces Regimes In 3 Balkan States As He Signs Treaties

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

President Truman yesterday denounced the Communist regimes of Hungary, Bulgaria and Romania, while he signed treaties with those countries and with Italy.

Governments of the three Balkan nations, he said, oppress their people but he considered it in their interest to end the state of war which has existed more than five years.

As for Italy, the President said that Americans were standing by her "while her people, through adversity, are rebuilding with their own labors a new democracy and restoring their lost freedoms."

The United States recognized, he said, that not all provisions of the Italian treaty were satisfactory. It should be possible, however, he added, to work out changes "in the light of future experience" through the United Nations.

Of Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania, Mr. Truman said, "I feel I must publicly express regret

Wallace Talk Sponsorship Called 'Red'

The House Committee on Un-American Activities yesterday charged that the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, under whose auspices Henry A. Wallace will speak tomorrow night, is "perhaps the most deviously camouflaged Communist-front organization."

In an official report to the House, the committee cited claims of Communist leaders themselves to prove that the conference is regarded by Communists as one of their "transmission belts."

The committee also cited as significant the fact that a year ago the CIO refused the aid of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare in "Operation Dixie," the union's southern organizing campaign. At the time the organizing drive began the CIO made it clear that the campaign would be strictly under control of the union's right wing forces.

Writer at Scene of Plane Crash Finds Human Cargo Smashed

By L. T. Easley

Red Cross Camp, Va., June 14 (AP).—The Capital airliner that crashed on a Blue Ridge mountainside last night hit with such force and burned so fiercely that the bodies of half of the 50 victims may never be fully identified.

I have just returned from a trip by jeep and on foot to the isolated spot where the big plane slashed a 200-yard swath through trees and then smashed itself and its human cargo to bits on a granite outcropping.

A grim scene greets the searcher breaking his way through undergrowth so thick that nothing is visible until he steps out of the brush into the little clearing created by the fire from the crash itself.

Dominating the setting is the great tail section of the DC-4 plane, charred but still upright.

A little way ahead lies the burned main body of the plane, with most of the passengers in or near the wreckage. Scattered on both sides lie the possessions they kept closest to them in their last flight—brief cases, women's handbags, notebooks, a few items of clothing, mostly charred.

Still farther ahead, up the mountainside, lie four or five bodies which were thrown clear. They are among the least mutilated.

The body of a 10-month-old baby, Judith Christine Bryan, was among the first found. That of her mother, Mrs. Martha Helen Bryan of Indianapolis, Ind., and Norfolk, Va., was not immediately identified.

Dr. Ludwig Lederer, airline physician, one of the earliest arrivals at the scene, estimated that "about 20" of the bodies had escaped the fire and the tearing force of the crash to such an extent that they could be readily identified. He said about five were so charred he doubted that they could ever be named. Other workers' estimates of the number multilated beyond recognition ran higher.

The crash scene itself is so isolated and so rough that rescue crews said a 3-mile carry by stretcher-bearers on foot might be necessary to bring the bodies out.

First arrivals reached the spot by climbing up the mountain which the plane hit near its crest. That route, however, is so rugged that rescue crews are considering a plan to carry the bodies to the top of the ridge, 300 or 400 yards away, and then carry them on foot or by horse another 2½ to 3 miles down the Georgia-to-Maine Appalachian

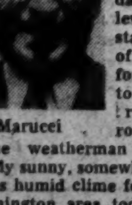
Flood Damage Heavy

Record-Breaking Rains Cause Death of 67-Year-Old Barber

(Record Floods Bring Threat of New Midwest Disaster. Page 13)

Record-breaking rains yesterday, which totaled 2.43 inches since their hesitating start at 3:30 p. m. Friday, were blamed yesterday in the death of a 67-year-old veteran Washington barber.



Marucci

They also wrought flood damage at low-level points, stalling scores of motorists and forcing wide detours over less troublesome routes.

The weatherman promised a mostly sunny, somewhat cooler and a less humid clime for the greater Washington area today.

Joseph Marucci, of 1702 Englewood rd., North Englewood, Md., keeled over from exertions of bailing out his flooded cellar. He died yesterday, six hours later, in Prince Georges County General Hospital, Cheverly, Md.

Seven-year-old Philip P. Buckler, jr., of 1819 Kearney st. ne., who started to cross rain-swept 18th st. ne. with a raincape over his head, was another victim of yesterday's weather. He was struck by an automobile but not seriously hurt.

Police said the lad was struck by a car operated by Harry W. Blunt, 41, of 8000 Westover rd., Bethesda, Md., in front of 314 18th st. ne., at 3:50 p. m. The boy was taken to Casualty Hospital and treated for lacerations of both knees and sent home with his mother.

Yesterday's intermittent downpours, coupled with previous rains this month, brought the total fall for the first two weeks of June to near the 6-inch level.

The sun yesterday fought hard against rain and shifting overcast, recording a high of 80 degrees at 12:30 p. m. before losing its hold for the day. Rains then took over with a vengeance.

Sabotage in Occupied Zones

Argentina Is Called Center Of 3-Continent Nazi Ring

London, June 14 (U.P.)—The International Committee for Study of European Questions said today that a vast Nazi underground was at work on three continents—Europe, South America and Africa—directing sabotage of the occupation effort in all four zones of Germany.

Dr. Robert Borel, secretary-general of the committee, said when he handed out copies of the committee's 10,000-word report that he believed the center of the Nazi underground was Argentina. The report said 90,000 Germans who took part in Nazi activities during the war were in Argentina.

Although unofficial, the committee's members include distinguished names from Britain, France, Denmark, the Netherlands, Belgium and Norway. Among the leaders are Lords Vansittart and Brabazon of Britain and former Danish Foreign Minister Christmas Moeller.

The committee released a report several months ago on Nazism in Germany under the occupation.

Today's report said thousands of Nazis were still active in Switzerland, Sweden, Argentina, South Africa, Italy and Germany. Dr. Borel said Americans did not care about either denazification or the Nazi revival; they had only one fear—Russia and Communism.

The report's opening statement said that "the war of 1939-1945 has destroyed neither Naziism nor fas-

6 Bodies Brought To Cemetery Chapel At Leesburg; Toll In 3 Crashes Is 146

(Other Pictures, Stories, Pages 2 and 3)

By Charles J. Yarbrough
Post Reporter

Fifty persons perished in the splintering crash of a Capital-Pennsylvania Central Air Lines DC-4 in the rain-swept Blue Ridge foothills 25 minutes out of Washington Friday night.

Scattered wreckage of the four-engined liner, strewn up the side of the 1640-foot ridge, began yielding its mutilated dead shortly before dusk yesterday. Forty-seven passengers and a crew of three, including at least 12 Metropolitan area residents, were dead.

Out of Chicago through Cleveland and Pittsburgh, the plane had been missing since its last radio report at Martinsburg, W. Va., at 7:08 p. m. (EDT) Friday.

60 Miles From Airport

Hundreds of rescue workers in small planes, jeeps and slogging through rain and mud over almost impassable terrain sought the wreckage through Friday night. It was spotted from the air early yesterday morning despite low-hanging clouds and driving rains, but it was well into the afternoon before rescue parties could make their way to it.

The scene is about 100 yards across the Virginia border into West Virginia, 3½ miles northwest of Hillsboro, Va., and six miles southeast of Charles Town, W. Va. It is about 60 airline mile from National Airport here and 1[illegible] miles northwest of Leesburg, Va.

By early evening, workers had removed at least 11 bodies from the burned and scattered wreck and carried them down the mountainside.

Only a few of the bodies removed had been identified, but FBI experts were on hand to aid in identification. Among the first brought down the mountain to Leesburg was 10-months-old Judith Christine Bryan, whose mother, Mrs. Martha Bryan, of Norfolk, Va., also perished.

The bodies were carried by rescue workers two miles down a rough path; then transferred to waiting hearses and ambulances.

They will go to the little chapel in Leesburg's Union Cemetery, turned into an emergency morgue for air crash victims for the second time in seven years. It was to Union Chapel that the bodies of Senator Lundeen of Minnesota and 24 other victims of an air crash in the Leesburg area in 1940 were taken.

At least 30 relatives of the victims were at Leesburg last night.

Airplane Crashes On Vt. Mountain In Rainstorm

Springfield, Vt., June 15 (Sunday) (AP).—A plane crashed on Hawk's Mountain during a heavy rainstorm early today, but the type of craft was not immediately identified.

The Civil Aeronautics communications office at Burlington said an Army B-29 plane was "missing."

Simultaneously, authorities at Rutland said they had been asked by Army officials to send ambulances and doctors into the Hawk's Mountain area.

Northeast Airlines, which flies the Vermont, New Hampshire area, reported all its planes accounted for.

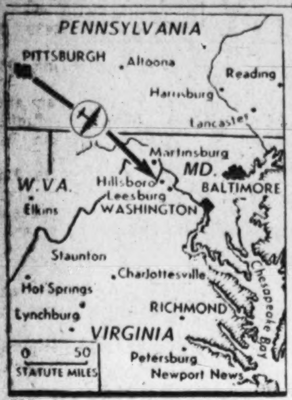
Truman Orders Air Crash Probe



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

CRASH LOCALE—Map locates scene of air disaster (arrow)

Senate Group Sends Investigator To Disaster Scene

President Truman and the Senate subcommittee probing recent airline crashes acted yesterday in the tragic wake of aviation's latest multi-death accident, the Blue Ridge Mountains plunge of a Capital Airlines DC-4 which killed 50 persons Friday night.

James M. Landis had two White House conferences. On both occasions his meeting was with John Steelman, presidential assistant, who apparently has been assigned by President Truman to look into the crashes.

After the conferences, Landis said he expected to receive preliminary data today from CAB investigators on the crash.

The Senate subcommittee dispatched a special investigator to the scene of the disaster to search for clues to the accident's cause. The committee is already probing recent air disasters at LaGuardia Field, N. Y., and Port Deposit, Md.

Landis Returns from N. Y.

Presidential Secretary Charles G. Ross told reporters no statement will be issued immediately from the White House on whether or not the Government is considering special action in connection with air safety. A Federal official acknowledged such action has been discussed but declined to divulge any particulars.

Landis returned to Washington yesterday from New York, where he had been investigating the LaGuardia Field crash which cost 43 lives May 29. CAB experts were said to be studying all available details of the Blue Ridge crash but declined to comment last night.

Senator Owen Brewster (R., Me.) chairman of the Senate subcommittee, said the three crashes which cost a total of 145 lives "strongly suggests a structural failure." The wrecked planes were all four-engined, DC-4's.

He declared it likely that Civil Aeronautics agencies would consider advisability of grounding all such planes until their full safety was approved.

Asks Grounding of DC-4s

Such a demand was made last night of the CAB by Representative Robert Tripp Ross (R., N. Y.). He asked the grounding of all commercial DC-4s converted from Army service until complete overhaulings and safety inspections had been made.

One Civil Aeronautics accident investigator, William C. Sievers, from New York, said probers are anxious to obtain the Capital Airline plane's clock. From it he said, investigators may be able to determine if the pilot began to "let down" too soon for his approach to Washington.

If stopped on crash impact, the clock would enable investigators to determine whether the plane proceeded on course or encountered trouble and was forced to circle, Sievers said. Investigators already have time reports on the flight up till the craft passed over Martinsburg, Wa. Va.

All on Plane Are Killed

were making removal of the bodies difficult.

"I don't think anyone on the plane suffered at all—it was instant death," said Gordon Stone, another Red Cross official who was first to report finding the plane from the ground.

The tragedy brought to 146 the total of victims who have died in commercial airline disasters since another DC-4 crashed on takeoff and burned at LeGuardia Field May 28, taking 43 lives. Two days later, at Port Deposit, Md., another DC-4 plunged into a wooded swamp, killing 53 persons.

All three planes were converted to commercial use from Army C-54s.

The Blue Ridge crash stirred quick official activity in Washington. Civil Aeronautics Board Chairman James M. Landis hurried down from New York for two conferences at the White House with Presidential Assistant John R. Steelman. Later, the White House, said it had no statement.

A special investigator from the Senate's subcommittee on recent air disasters was dispatched to the Capital liner scene. Representative Robert Tripp Ross (R., N. Y.) asked immediate grounding of all DC-4's which have been converted from Army C-54s.

At the controls of Capital's liner was 46-year-old Capt. Horace Stark, of Arlington, one of the company's million-mile pilots, with 14,000 hours of flying time.

His copilot was R. N. Creekmore, 28, also of Arlington, a former Air Transport Command flier with 2500 hours. The third crew member was Margaret (Peggy) Walls, 24, of Washington, the hostess.

Throughout the day, as the heavily wooded, hilly terrain hampered rescue and search parties, Civil Aeronautics Board officials and the Red Cross were setting up forward operations. One emergency Red Cross station was within 4 miles of the crash.

James D. Henry, vice president of the airlines, said rescue work would continue steadily and that it appeared possible to remove all the bodies today. If not, he said, workers would carry on through tonight and Monday.

The four-engined plane, buffeted by one rainstorm and approaching another, was boring through the mists over the last high land barrier before reaching the Potomac River Valley slopes.

It missed clearing the 1640-foot ridge by 200 feet.

From Hillsboro, on the north fork of the Catoctin Creek, to the crash scene is a steady rise.

Down the valley toward Purcellville is the cabin birthplace of Susan Koerner Wright, mother of Orville and Wilbur Wright, who built and flew the Nation's first airplane. A marker points the spot where Mrs. Wright was born in 1831.

Friday night, hours before airline officials acknowledged the big liner was down, they issued a chronology of the ill-fated flight. It left Chicago at 1:45 p. m. (EST), roared out of Pittsburgh at 5:20 and headed for an estimated arrival time in Washington at 7:25 p. m. (EDT).

Its customary radio contact was made over Martinsburg, W. Va., at 7:08 p. m. and began usual letdown procedure from 7000 to 3000 feet. He was flying under contact flight rules, which means ground points were visible and he was not on instruments. What conditions were by the time the plane roared into the ridge have not been determined. The Martinsburg radio contact was the plane's last.

The long, rain-filled night baffled rescue and search efforts and reports filtered in over a 50-mile radius of persons hearing "a plane in trouble;" of "seeing a flash in the sky."

Not until daybreak could air search attempts be undertaken. On foot, groping through the dawn in unbelievably impassable country, searchers investigated every report; trudged wearily out of blind canyons to try again.

Plane Ruins Searched for Bodies . . .

GRIM WORK IN THE BLUE RIDGES—A searching party probes the scattered wreckage of PCA Capitaliner high on a slope of the Blue Ridge Mountains, 15 miles west of Leesburg, Va. All 50 persons aboard the Washington-bound airliner perished

Washington Doctor Describes Arrival at Airliner Wreckage

By Dr. W. Ronald Strong

(Dr. Strong, who lives at 2022 Columbia rd. nw., was one of the first persons to reach the crash scene. In 1945 he was medical examiner for a short time with Capital Air Lines. This is his story as told to a Post reporter.)

We started out up the rugged Appalachian Trail from a place called Good's Springs. With us were two Red Cross disaster units. We took two jeeps, loaded with shovels, blankets, air compressors and other sorts of useful supplies. Also we took a two-way radio communications car furnished by the Virginia State Police.

It was tough going. One jeep had to push and the other had to pull a police car. We later had to abandon it.

About noon it cleared, and searcher planes circling over the wreckage directed us to the scene

The first thing we noticed at the scene was the burned underbrush. Then we saw parts of the plane. We had to clear brush about 100 square feet to get to the plane and clear another space in which to lay the bodies.

Pieces of the plane, the seats, gears, parts of the panelling, the internal trimmings were scattered in a path about 200 yards long and 50 to 75 yards wide.

The plane looked to me as if it came into the side of the mountain, flying normally at whatever speed such planes ordinarily travel, and just stopped.

The wreckage was lying on a part of the ridge about 35 to 40 degrees steep, about 300 to 500 feet from the top.

Just above the wreckage the mountain was just about vertical.

If the pilot had 1000 feet more elevation, he would have cleared the ridge.

The wreckage impressed me very much like a watermelon thrown from a truck and burst wide open

The bodies had been thrown about just as the watermelon seeds would have been scattered. However,there were some bodies still ever, there were some bodis still

Some of them were badly burned. There were others hardly burned at all.

The bodies were over about the same area as parts of the plane. My impression was that everybody was killed instantly. Some of them had broken legs or arms, others bruises and abrasions. All of them, I think, can be identified by some means or other.

The Red Cross disaster workers and PCA crews cleared an area of about 100-square yards in which to lay the bodies. We began then taking up the bodies and wrapping them in blankets. We recovered and laid out about 8 to 10 bodies by 2:30 to 3 p. m., which was the time I left the scene.

None of the bodies was brought down off the mountain. It may require two days to get them all out, because of the underbrush and lack of a trail to the scene.

One motor was intact; two were totally destroyed, apparently by fire and one partially destroyed.

I left because there was no need for doctors there.

At the end of that carry, jeeps can meet the bearers and take over their grim burdens. Not even the nimble wartime vehicles can traverse the last two and a half to three miles even on the trail.

The shorter uphill route is perhaps less than two miles from a point that can be reached by jeep from this rescue headquarters set up by the Red Cross. But the first half to three-quarters of a mile is marshland and the rest is an uphill grind through dense brush, and over ravines, with no vestige of trail.

The whole rescue operation has been severely hampered by steady rain that has soaked searchers and made the rough footing still more treacherous.

Rescue crewmen said it must have been raining heavily when the big ship smashed into the mountain. The immediate area is burned clear by fire from the broken fuel tanks, but the blaze did not spread over much of the mountainside, indicating that the trees and brush were wet.

The charred clearing is visible from a mile or so away on the other side of a valley, but is lost to sight as soon as searchers, heading toward it, drop below the line of the dense growth surrounding it.

The granite outcrop on which the airliner disintegrated is the only one seen for miles around.

Airliner's 50 Dead Had Varied Stories

His Lady's Friday the 13th Birthday Was One Passenger's Reason for Flying

They were from all walks of life, those 50 passengers aboard the wrecked DC-4—some bound for pleasure, others on business trips.

The fragmentary stories of their backgrounds—from the millionaire's daughter to the housewife hurrying to her brother's sick bed—all told of some hope smashed in the Blue Ridge Mountains.

Take Bill Watson. Flying was nothing new to him.

For nearly 15 years he had been "commuting" from Pittsburgh about twice a month to visit his sweetheart in Alexandria, Va. When the regular flights between the two cities were begun, he just naturally took to the air so he'd have more time with her.

Because Friday, the 13th, was his girl friend's birthday, William Moore Watson made the Capital flight that was to end in disaster in the Blue Ridge Mountains.

His sweetheart, Miss Ann N. Nunnenkamp, 718 S. Washington st., Alexandria, is secretary to Judge T. Webber Wilson, chairman of the United States Board of Parole.

They were thinking of getting married, she said last night.

To another of the ill-fated plane's passengers, a 17-year-old St. Paul, Minn., girl, the trip to Washington was a brand-new experience.

Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred A. Kueppers, gave Margaret the trip as a graduation gift—her first plane ride and her first visit to Washington. Graduated from high school June 6, she was to spend about two weeks with her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. John J. Courtney, 620 Bennington dr., Silver Spring, Md.

Courtney, an attorney here, called the Keuppers from National Airport Friday night to find out if Margaret had actually left. It was then that Margaret's parents knew something was amiss.

Courtney was within a half mile of the crash scene last night, it was said at his home, and he was awaiting news from rescue workers. Margaret's father had decided to stay with Mrs. Keuppers, who is ill in a St. Paul hospital.

Dorothy Ann Hosford, 18, youngest daughter of Harry W. Hosford, nationally known investment banker who once made headlines by buying 21 million dollars in war bonds in one month, was coming here to attend a coming-out party. She was to have stayed with Navy Capt. and Mrs. William T. Easton, 3070 Foxhall rd. nw.

The party she was to have attended with a group of companions was held at Berryville, Va., about 12 miles from the crash scene.

Mrs. Iona Price of Akron, mother of three children, changed planes in Pittsburgh when she learned that the ship she was on would not go to Washington, where an unidentified brother is ill.

Dr. Joseph H. Marko got on the plane at Cleveland with his new bride, the former Florence Marks. They were bound for Norfolk, Va., where Marko, just commissioned in the Navy, would receive his first orders.

Mrs. Martha Shackelford Bryan had been visiting in Indianapolis, and was returning with her baby to Norfolk, where her husband is a Navy chief petty officer.

James E. Terry, 35, also knew his way around the air lanes. He headed a freight airline in Long Beach, Calif., and made many plane trips, including visits to his wife, Mrs. Clara Adele Terry, 1602 Eastern ave. ne., secretary to Representative George H. Bender (R., Ohio).

Five minutes before he boarded the plane at Pittsburgh, he called his wife and asked about weather here. When he heard it was raining and foggy, he expressed concern, but took the plane anyway.

In 1942, while employed here by an electrical contractor, Terry was jolted by electricity when he tried to pull a fellow worker from a live wire on a job at Half and Q sts. se. The other man was killed instantly.

Ten From Washington Area Were Aboard Wrecked Plane

Dr. Smith, administrator of medical services for the Red Cross, and Miss Harman, special representative who had been a Red Cross employe since 1918, had been attending the Red Cross national convention in Cleveland.

Dr. Smith was spearheading the new blood donor program designed to be the greatest peacetime drive the Red Cross has ever had.

Born in Michigan, he moved to Everett, Wash., and in 1917 to 1919 served with the Field Artillery. After studying at University of Washington and University of Oregon, he received his medical degree from Oregon Medical School in Portland in 1933. He practiced medicine, then became a health officer in Portland and later for the Territory of Alaska. He served the United States Public Health Service from 1940 to 1942, later serving with the Office of Civilian Defense.

Dr. Smith joined the Red Cross in 1945, then was assigned by the Public Health Service to the Army's strategic bomb survey in German. He was married and had a 19-year-old daughter.

Miss Harman had served as chapter executive, disaster relief worker, fund campaign director, assistant in volunteer services and, most recently, as supervisor of hospitality. Her family home is in Tazewell, Va.

During World War I Miss Harman worked in national headquarters. After that she served n various capacities, including frequent disaster relief assignments. In World War II, she organized war-fund campaigns and assisted in projects connected with the training of personnel for service with the armed forces. She also had been very active in American Legion auxiliary work.

She was educated at Lynchburg College, Bryn Mawr College and the University of North Carolina, receiving an M. A. from the latter. Later she majored in sociology and community organization at the University of Chicago.

Miss Harman leaves two sisters and a brother, J. W. Harman, an attorney, in Tazewell.

Godwin, who had lived here about 15 years, had a long career in the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture. He was well known as a forest fire prevention and control expert.

He met his wife, Thelma Strabel, well-known serial writer and motion picture scenarist, when she visited the Forest Service offices to gather material for one of her first successes, "The Forest Ranger." They were married about five years ago.

Godwin was born in Virginia and joined the Forest Service several years before World War I. He served overseas 22 months with the First Division Engineers and graduated from the Army General Staff School and the Army School of the Line.

After working for several years as labor relations adviser for a New York textile company, he returned to the Forest Service as assistant national chief of fire control, in Washington. During World War II, he was made chief, and also became the liaison man with the military services for all Forest Service activities. He directed some 200,000 volunteers in aircraft warning services and also more than 100,000 troops, in both plane spotting and fire fighting activities. He was chairman of the forest committee of the National Fire Prevention Association, and senior member of the American Society of American Foresters.

Besides pioneering in the Service's "smoke jumper" corps of parachutists, Godwin had been in charge of the helicopter testing program, and the use of water and chemistry bombs, being used jointly with the Army.

Copilot Has Two Sons

The plane's copilot, Creekmore, lived with his wife, Mrs. Mary Lee Creekmore, and their two sons, Charles, 2, and Tony, 7.

An AAF war veteran, he served as a photo reconnaissance navigator in the CBI theater and once was forced to crash-land a B-25 in Burma.

Returning to this country in 1944, he took his pilot's training with the Army, was discharged in the spring of 1945, and has served with Capital Airlines both as a pilot and a copilot since.

A native of Wolfe, Tex., he had lived in Washington nearly two years.

Another crash victim, Coe, was a counsel for the De Vilbiss Co. of Toledo, Ohio, and former OPA official.

He was returning from Ohio to visit his wife, Mrs. Eleanor Coe, and two children, Allen, jr., 7, and Jane Coe, 9. Friends said the family was living in Arlington until Coe could find a home in Toledo.

His last post with OPA was director of building construction in the price divsion. Earlier, he had served as war goods price coordinator for OPA.

Prior to joining the OPA in 1942, he was chief counsel for the Bituminous Coal Commission in Washington.

A native of Marshall, Va., Coe graduated from Washington's Central High School and received his law degree from George Washington University.

Family Came to Meet Passenger

According to friends, Stone's wife, Mrs. Jane Sanford Stone, and three children, Peter 8, Martha 6 and Jeffrey 5, had gone down to National Airport Friday night to welcome him home from the West Coast, where he had arranged to take a job as an economist with a private concern.

Mr. Stone, who was assistant director of the statistical control and reports branch of the Housing Expeditor's Office, grew up in Pullman, Wash., and was a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Washington State College there in 1933.

He did graduate work at Brown University and at the Brookings Institution here before entering Government service in 1936.

His mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Stone, live in Pullman; a brother, Charles Stone, in Seattle, and a sister, Mrs. Irvin R. Woods, in Omak, Wash.

Leaves Two Children

Fox had been in Newcastle, Pa., on business Thursday with the Johnson Bronze Co. A former Navy lieutenant, he had lived in Washington for about three years. He was born in Cleveland Heights, Ohio, and attended Fenn College, where he was a member of the track team and president of the Student Council. Before entering the Navy he had been employed by the Cleveland Drill Twist Co. Besides his wife, he leaves two children, ages 3 years and 10 months.

Mrs. De Cray, who had been employed by the State Department since 1941, was returning to this country from service in China, where she had been stationed briefly after duty in Manila since January. On a prior tour of duty from 1943 to 1945, she was assigned to the Office of Strategic Services in the China-Burma-India theater.

She was en route to visit with a friend, Mrs. Constance McGinnis, 1607 Montello ave. ne., with whom she had lived while in Washington.

Her husband, Capt. C. C. De Cray, lost his life in China. A 10-month-old daughter, Sharon, is staying with Mrs. De Cray's parents near Norfolk, Nebr.

Captain Stark, the pilot, had been flying 26 years, having started with Curtis Aviation Co. in 1921. In 1928, he began to fly the mail run between Pittsburgh and Cleveland, and later between Pittsburgh and Washington.

Capital Airlines honored Captain Stark and four other pilots in March of this year for their experience of more than two million miles of flying. Captain Stark was well known as an inventor of safety navigational aids, including the Stark position finder, an electronic device which the airlines generally adopted in 1939.

His wife lives at the Arlington address.

Miss Walls, the stewardess, whose family home is in Guntersville, Ala., was employed by the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Army Air Forces here before she joined the airline. She had been accepted for WASP training during the war, but obtained a private flying license instead and then became a hostess.

New Fighting Planes Pass In 'Preview'

(Post Reporter John G. Norris who has just returned from a tour of plane factories and test bases in the West, gives a preview of tomorrow's air forces.)

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Spectacular new American aircraft—the Thunderbolts, Hellcats and Superforts of future wars—are on the way from drawing board to flying squadron.

They include a much improved B-29, 600-mile an hour jet bombers and rocket-propelled craft expected to fly faster than sound.

Some have made their maiden flights. But mere existence of the new planes does not guarantee America supremacy in the air. The picture is not as bright as the gleaming wings of the new jet fighters.

Most of the new planes still carry the designation "X"—for experimental.

Some of the few in production have weaknesses designers are trying to overcome.

The dazzling speeds, ranges and bombloads are not combined in any one craft. Those which promise range and bomb capacity are relatively slow. The high-speed jets have a relatively limited radius of action.

Our new jet bombers are still an unknown quantity. There have been preliminary tests, but speed runs and service trials are still ahead.

What will happen when their bomb-bay doors are opened at 500 miles an hour?

What about bombing accuracy at such high speed?

Must releasing gear and bomb ballistics be redesigned?

Aside from these problems, the Army Air Forces and Naval Aviation must decide on which of the new craft they want to concentrate and which to discard.

What types will make up United States air forces of tomorrow? Here is a brief analysis of the principal contenders and their chances of making the team.

HEAVY BOMBERS

1. Consolidated-Vultee's huge B-36—the largest plane ever to fly. Weighing 139 tons, the bomber has a wing-span of 230 feet and its tail is as high as a five-story building. It has six pusher-type conventional piston engines.

Though designed to carry 10,000 pounds of bombs 10,000 miles, the first model has a range of 8000 miles only. Its 300-mile an hour speed is unsatisfactory.

These weaknesses have drawn criticism. Will not such slow craft be sitting ducks for enemy fighters and anti-aircraft? How can fighter protection be given B-36 groups on long missions?

AAF officials say that new engines to be installed in later craft will boost the speed to about 350 mph. They expect gas turbine engines—turning propellors—to be ready within 18 months. This should raise the speed another 50 mph, it is said.

Improvements soon to be adopted, it is said, will give the plane its designed 10,000-mile range.

Another difficulty also is being overcome in part. New landing gear permits limited operations from all B-29 fields. Full scale operations of the giant craft are possible from only three air bases in the United States.

Despite its slow speed, the B-36 should be an important addition to American air power. While vulnerable, any craft which can carry atomic bombs across the world is a tremendous threat. Convair has a production order of 100 of the bombers.

Not Yet Flown

2. Boeing's B-50. This is a vastly improved B-29, propelled by four conventional engines. There was no experimental protype and the first production model—No. 1 of 133—rolled out of the factory this week. It has not yet been flown, but AAF officials are counting heavily on it as a replacement of the B-29.

3. Northop's Flying Wing. This large unconventional type, known as the XB-35 with four reciprocating piston engines and the XB-49 when propelled by eight jets, is a doubtful starter. While "The Wing" promises to blaze the trail for aircraft of tomorrow, most AAF officers believe that only a few of each type will be built.

The XB-35 has experienced difficulties in preliminary flight tests, and has other drawbacks. Its speed is under that of the new jet mediums—though above the B-36—yet its range and bombload is under the latter.

4. Boeing is understood to be developing a long-range bomber, of B-36 dimensions, using gas turbines to turn its propellers. It is still in the design stage.

MEDIUM BOMBERS

5. North American's XB-45. This is America's first jet bomber in production. Powered by four jet engines, it is expected to develop a speed of 550 miles an hour and have an 800-mile radius of action carrying 10 tons of bombs. Preliminary tests have highly pleased AAF officials. Few "bugs" have developed. However, jet bombers are pioneering in strange country, and many problems are expected. North American has orders for 96 of these planes.

6. Consolidated-Vultee's XB-46. This plane is designed for the same range, speed and bombload as the XB-45. Preliminary tests indicate it will be equally, if not more, successful as the XB-45. The latter, however, is more advanced in test.

There are no production orders as yet for the XB-46 and probably will be none unless it demonstrates a clear superiority over other medium jet bombers. Convair already has a large contract for B-36s and the AAF must spread its orders around to keep aircraft companies in business.

7. Boeing's XB-47. Army Air Forces chiefs are enthusiastic over this new type, which is still building. The first plane is expected to fly this summer. It is of highly advanced design, with swept-back wings and thin fuselage.

Bombload and range of the XB-47 are expected to approximate those of the XB-45 and XB-46, but a tremendously highspeed is hoped for—635 miles per hour.

8. Glenn Martin's XB-48. This is a six-jet job, larger than the other three medium bombers, with greater range and bomb carrying capacity. Tests are just starting.

FIGHTERS

9. Lockheed's P-80 Shooting Star—The only postwar fighting plane which the American public has gotten a good look at in flight and on the ground. The "bugs" have largely been eliminated. AAF officials say P-80s in service now can fire their machine guns at high speed and a newer model will be able to drop bombs at top speeds.

10. Republic's P-84 Thunderjet. This is a slightly faster fighter than the P-80, with a little more range. It has reached a speed of 619 miles per hour in unofficial timed runs at Muroc.

11. The AAF may go into production on a third jet fighter. Three with expected greater performance than the Shooting Star and Thunderjet are building. Most likely winner is Curtiss-Wright's P-87. The company has no large plane contract now.

However, the AAF may wait for a jet fighter with rocket assist which is expected to get into transonic speeds—around 700 miles an hour.

12. One interesting new pursuit type is the McDonald P-85 "parasite" fighter. This small, high-speed craft has no landing gear. It is designed to be carried aboard the B-36, released and caught back aboard. Most AAF officers, however, consider it of doubtful value.

CARRIER AIRCRAFT

13. McDonald's XF2D Banshee. This Navy jet fighter is the "white hope" of flattop pilots. Two experimental models are flying and production orders undoubtedly will be placed. The Banshee should fly over 600 miles an hour with a fair-sized range.

Many problems, however, must be solved before jet planes can operate regularly from aircraft carriers. Landing speeds must be reduced. Arresting gear and launching devices must be modified. And something will have to be done about the blast of the jet engines on the flight deck.

14. North American's XFJ. Another new jet carrier fighter with a speed of "over 550 miles an hour." Tests are underway.

15. Chance-Vought's F6U Pirate. Still another jet fighter with slightly less speed than the XFJ. Whether the Navy goes into production with either depends upon how they perform.

16. Ryan's FR Fireball. This "hybrid" has a conventional prop engine in the nose and a jet in the tail. One squadron is in service, but no more will be bought, officials say.

17. Douglas' AD Skyraider. This is known as an "attack" plane—a new type in the Navy. It is expected to replace the SB2C Helldiver and be used for both dive-bombing and torpedo assaults. Navy fliers say it has a speed of 350 miles an hour. It is mostly engine—one big reciprocating motor—and carries no crew besides the pilot.

18. Martin's AM Mauler. Though differing in detailed design, the Mauler is similar in many respects to the Skyraider. Both will be employed at sea in limited numbers.

No carrier-based jet attack plane has yet been built, though the Navy is working on such a craft.

Chinese Red Push Blamed On Russians

Nanking, June 14 (AP).—The government's Central News Agency charged today "a certain nation"—a Chinese press term for Russia—planned and directed the current Communist offensive in Manchuria, backing it with 30,000 Japanese war prisoners and 90 tanks.

This unsupported charge came as the Communists were reported steadily encircling Mukden and staging a daring raid in North China only four miles from Peiping.

The government strove to find a local settlement of the Outer Mongolian raid on far-western Sinkiang province. It said fighting had ceased in adjacent semi-autonomous Tibet, where the ruling Lamas had defied Chinese military authority.

Central News said more than 100,000 Koreans trained in northern Korea (the Russian zone) and a cavalry division from pro-Soviet Outer Mongolia were in action on the Communist side in Manchuria.

Chinese press dispatches said the Communists had attacked Panhsi, 35 miles south of Mukden.

Associated Press Correspondent John Roderick in Peiping reported heavy gunfire was plainly heard there when the Communists raided a town 4 miles south of the city and another 6 miles to the southwest.

District to Get 2 Safety Awards

Two national safety awards will be formally presented to Washington Thursday at a 12:30 p. m. luncheon at the Mayflower Hotel.

The city won the National Traffic Safety Contest grand award for 1946 for traffic safety in cities of 500,000 or more population and the second-place award in the national pedestrian protection contest.

Tax Urged to Aid Alcoholic Clinics

Senator John S. Cooper (R., Ky.) declared yesterday he favored a 10 per cent increase in liquor taxes to pay for alcoholic clinics in the District.

Senator Cooper is chairman of the District subcommittee which has been conducting hearings on the bill. A similar bill has been approved by the House after elimination of an extra liquor tax to finance the cure institutions.

One more hearing is to be held by the subcommittee, Cooper said, possibly next week.

O'Konski to Open VFW Convention

Representative Alvin E. O'Konski (R., Wis.), member of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee, will open the Veterans of Foreign Wars district convention at 8 o'clock tonight at the Mayflower Hotel with an address on veterans' legislation pending in Congress.

More than 800 delegates from 30 posts are expected to attend the three-day encampment, Charles M. O'Malley, district department commander, predicted.

U. N. to Get 'Non-Political' Loan Proposal

Lake Success, N. Y., June 14 (U.P.). Russia's Alexander Morozov said today he would ask the United Nations Economic and Employment Commission to begin immediate consideration of his plan for non-military, nonpolitical loans "in the interests of the people of the countries receiving credit."

Morozov has submitted a draft resolution to the commission approving loans, "but not for military needs nor to the detriment of the independence of the countries, nor for deriving political and other advantages for countries rendering loans and credits."

Isador Lubin, foromer adviser to President Roosevelt and now the United States member and rapporteur of the commission, has a draft report before the commission, but it does not discuss the military or political aspects of the loans.

Morozov suggested that the commission ask the Economic and Social Council to:

1. Call the attention of the members of the U. N. to the existence of unemployment, "which is reaching sizable proportions in some of the countries;" to take the necessary measures toward the elimination of unemployment.

2. Call attention to "abnormally high prices for export goods" and take measures toward lowering these high prices.

3. "To approve such loans and credits which are directed toward economic development and reconstruction in the interests of the peoples of the countries receiving credit, but not for military needs nor to the detriment of the independence of the countries, nor for deriving political and other advantages for countries rendering loans and credits."

Lubin said the Economic and Social Council should:

1. Recommend that countries whose economies are in need of reconstruction should attempt to increase production to a maximum level; adopt fiscal policies that will yield the maximum assistance in increasing output; use manpower in a manner that will afford the greatest possible efficiency, and avoid any measure restrictive of international trade.

2. Member countries that have commodities available should avoid any measures that would tend to restrict imports from countries in need of economic reconstruction.

3. Those countries that have attained high levels of output and employment should maintain such levels and make financial and other resources available to those less fortunate.

4. Request the U. N. secretary general and the specialized agencies to furnish technical assistance for encouraging higher levels of production.

5. Request the Economic Commission for Europe to survey the problems of raising production; estimate the reconstruction needs of Europe, and then to survey the available sources of supplying those needs both from within Europe and "to estimate the amounts of credit required to make possible the importation of the necessary and available supplies from sources abroad."

D. C. Rent Control Airing Tomorrow

The fate of rent control in Washington will be aired tomorrow before a House District subcommittee.

Rep. Joseph P. O'Hara (R., Minn.) said public hearings would begin on two bills which propose extension of rent controls until the end of 1948 and would bring commercial properties under rent control.

Testimony is to be given first by District Rent Control authorities said O'Hara.

Draft Need to Be Debated

Bean Shooter, Scissors Injure 5-Year-Olds

CITED FOR SAFETY—Mickey Wright, Taft Junior High School student, receives a certificate from H. C. Henderson of the District Red Cross chapter for successfully completing a course in accident prevention. Several students received the awards

A youngster of 5, who was shot in the eye with a bean shooter, was among 106 District residents injured in home accidents last week.

Another child of 5 received a severe eye injury when she fell with scissors in her hand. Both children were hospitalized.

Others injured, according to a Red Cross home accident report released yesterday, included a man of 42 whose right hand was burned and his thumb and index finger lacerated when a chemical set exploded; a woman who tripped over a dog and cut her lip on a coffee table; two adults who sustained back injuries when they fell from stepladders.

A youth of 19 cut his foot while chopping wood, and two women, aged 22 and 71, incurred cuts on their legs and ankles when bottles of carbonated beverages fell from their refrigerators and exploded on the floor.

Two youngsters, boys of 2 and 3, had objects removed from their throats.

Four deaths from home accidents were reported. Three of the fatalities were attributed to falls and one to suffocation. A partial breakdown of those injured: 37 in falls, 8 burned, 2 accidentally poisoned, 33 received lacerations.

France Studies Marshall Plan

diplomats already have been holding consultations which have led to the expectation that these three countries will be very much in accord with the American plan for economic aid to Europe. The announcement said consultations took place within the framework of Benelux, the compact by which they have agreed to economic cooperation among themselves.

Significantly, it was an enthusiastic Bevin who took the initiative in arranging the Paris talks with French Foreign Minister Georges Bidault and Premier Paul Ramadier. Typically it was Bidault who, before accepting Bevin's proposal for a conference, cautiously asked Russia if she was willing to hold separate discussions with France on the subject.

Russia has not yet replied. Violent French Communist reaction to the Marshall plan came from the party newspaper L'Humanite today, however. The paper said the plan was an economic cloak for American "political imperialism" and a perfecting of President Truman's "interventionist system."

Marshall has said Russia could have a part in the plan.

There seemed little doubt but that the Bevin-Bidault talks heralded the shaping of concrete plans for meeting Marshall's conditions that Europe itself must come forward with a plan and suggestions for implementing a coordinated recovery program for the continent as a whole.

Officially, however, French reaction has been limited to an expression that she is "tremendously interested" and a statement that Ambassador Henri Bonnet in Washington has been instructed to say as much and to ask for a "few clarifications."

The reason for this caution, it appeared, lies in France's complex political makeup in which the largest single group is the Communist Party.

On the other hand, Bevin indorsed the general plan outspokenly in the Commons yesterday with the declaration that it was an offer by the United States to build a bridge linking "East and West."

Train of Future On View Tuesday

Nagy Urges U. N. Probe Of Hungary

New York, June 14 (U.P.)—Ferenc Nagy, deposed premier of Hungary, arrived by plane tonight from Switzerland and said he believed the United Nations should investigate the Communist-dominated Hungarian government. He said he was "sure" the U. N. would act.

Nagy denied that he opposed U. N. investigation of the coup by which the Communist-backed minority seized power in Hungary on May 30.

During a brief stop at Shannon Airport, Eire, earlier today, Nagy declared that "recent events in Hungary are a simulated crisis and the direct result of United States intervention in Greece and Turkey."

He said events in Hungary are being duplicated "in all southeastern European countries at the moment. The communists in every country have the same political methods."

In New York, however, Nagy denied that he said the events in Hungary resulted from the Truman doctrine.

Nagy was accompanied by his wife, daughter, Julia, 21, and son Laszlo, 4.

The former premier was met at LaGuardia Field by Aladar Szegedy-Maszek, resigned Hungarian minister to the United States, Dr. Alexander Szasz, former economic adviser to the Hungarian legation at Washington, and Laszlo Medgyesy, Hungarian consul at New York.

The Nagys planned to leave later tonight by train for Washington.

Nagy said he was "in no position to comment" on the possibility of forming a government-in-exile.

As Nagy gave a brief prepared speech of thanks in Hungarian to a small group of Hungarian-Americans who greeted him, an unidentified man attempted to heckle him. Detectives seized the heckler and took him away.

Some spectators marched in front of the terminal building and waved placards bearing anti-Nagy and pro-Leftist inscriptions, including:

"Did you come here to join conspiring reactionaries whom you condemned not so long ago?"

"Support democratic Hungary—expose the Fascist conspirators."

"The Hapsburgs and Horthys caused two world wars. We don't want a third one."

Nagy never saw the demonstrators. There was no disorder.

Nagy expressed his appreciation to the American government "for its offer of hospitality which will enable me to give all the facts (about Hungary) for publication to the world."

Asked what help he expected the democratic nations to give Hungary, the former premier said:

"When the big powers won the war every country was led to believe that no obstacle would occur in setting up a democratic government and no country would threaten their independence. It was expected that the big powers would watch developments in the smaller powers and investigate when necessary."

Nagy said the purpose of his trip was to "convince the democratic big powers that the people of Hungary and other southeastern European countries need their assistance now to show that freedom and liberty are more than words."

Before Nagy left Switzerland, he disclosed that there was about $500,000 in Hungarian gold in Switzerland which Hungary would never get until it had a "freely elected" government. The gold was transferred to Switzerland in 1943.

Secure Peace, Fathers Urged

New York, June 14 (AP).—The man selected as the "father of the year" urged the fathers of the world today to secure a lasting peace for their children.

This was the message that 69-year-old Warren R. Austin, father of two sons and chief American delegate to the United Nations, had for all fathers on the eve of Father's Day observances in the United States.

"The fathers of the world are faced with a challenge that belongs to these times," Austin declared. "Their children are very interested in the United Nations, partly because of their own great stake in its success or failure, and partly because they are better educated in international affairs than the children of several generations ago.

"The success of the United Nations depends on the young people of today. They, therefore, need all the help their fathers can give them."

U. N. Inquiry Unit Arrives In Palestine

Jerusalem, June 14 (AP).—The first members of the United Nations Special Commission on Palestine arrived today.

Justice Emil Sandstroem of Sweden, commission chairman, said on his arrival at Lydda Airdrome that the group will tour Palestine prior to opening the inquiry "in order to acquaint ourselves with the country." The commission will hold a plenary session on Monday, then adjourn for the tour.

Sandstroem emphasized that despite the Arab boycott of the commission its members will tour both Arab and Jewish sections "because we want a full picture of the situation despite the Arab intention to withhold their cooperation."

The Palestine Arabs formally notified the United Nations at Lake Success last night they were boycotting the commission.

Sandstroem was accompanied by three other commission members, Nashrollah Entezam of Iran, Justice Ivan Cleveland Rand of Canada, Dr. Enrique Rodriguez Fabregat of Uruguay, and other alternative delegates and secretaries.

Wool Support Bill Revised

By The Associated Press

A Senate-House Committee said in a formal report yesterday that its compromise version of a wool price support bill eliminates the possibility of any "conflict" with any existing trade agreement.

The conference committee said this is assured by a provision of the bill stating that "no proclamation under this section with respect to wool shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or international agreement to which the United States is now a party."

Secretary of State Marshall has protested that a part of the bill which, in effect, would direct the President to limit imports or increase duties on wool when imports threaten the price support program, would endanger the trade negotiations at the Geneva Conference.

Liberty Party Leader Defies Hungary Reds

Budapest, June 14 (AP).—Dezso Sulyok, Hungarian leader of the tiny Freedom Party, prodded his Communist foes anew today by boldly announcing he will stage a political rally Monday at Szeged, second largest city in Hungary, to test Communist reaction to his charges that Hungary was now a gagged police state.

He invited American and British correspondents to Szeged, southwest of Budapest and near the Yugoslav border. Hungarian politicians said they believed the Communists would not attempt to interfere with the meeting because of the publicity Sulyok has been receiving abroad.

In a speech on Thursday which threw parliament into a turmoil Sulyok charged that whenever he staged a meeting 400 to 500 persons, "amply armed, well paid and quite drunk," appeared to upset the gathering and in most cases assault the audience and speakers.

Sulyok was attacked in the leftist press today as a "leader of Hungarian reaction."

One newspaper quoted Minister of Justice Istvan Ries as saying "we cannot tolerate foreign intervention" in the Hungarian elections set tentatively for September. It was an apparent reply to Sulyok's statement yesterday that his Freedom Party, which has only 18 members in parliament, will boycott the elections unless there is international supervision.

The Russian commander in Budapest today refused, for the third time, an American proposal for a tripartite investigation of Hungarian internal affairs.

The commander, Lieut. Gen. V. P. Sviridov, charged that the American proposal contained attempts "under the disguise of defense of Hungarian democracy" to support persons who were involved in a plot against the republic.

Sviridov added that the American charge that Communists had assumed control in Hungary and that the will of the people who had voted for the Smallholders Party had thus been nullified was an "unfounded fiction."

Russian Gift Reported

Paris, June 14 (U.P.).—Paris Soir last night quoted Arpad Szakasits, the Hungarian vice premier who is now in Paris, that Russia has made Hungary a gift of $200 million dollars.

He did not specify whether the gift was in goods or foreign credits.

Soviet Advisers Visit

London, June 14 (U.P.).—Exchange Telegraph reported from Vienna today that a special commission of the Soviet security services is now visiting the Balkan capitals to discuss with security authorities "the experiences and measures which will apply in the common fight against reactionary intrigues."

The agency said the commission was under the leadership of Soviet Security Expert M. Reusemann.

Guerillas Increase Attacks On Greek Government Forces

Athens, Greece, June 14 (U.P.).—Press reports indicated today that the tempo of guerilla attacks against the Greek government had increased considerably in the past 24 hours, with 232 guerillas reported slain in clashes from the southern Peloponnesos to the Yugoslav border in the north.

Heaviest fighting was reported from the Peloponnesos, where 45 guerillas and 10 gendarmes were reported killed during a guerilla raid on the town of Daphne.

An army detachment trapped the same guerilla band as it fled northward, these reports said, and killed 55 more in a sharp battle near Patras.

Other reports said 80 guerillas were killed near Sparta, 38 in central Thessaly and 14 near Kastanousa, south of the Yugoslav border.

Meanwhile, a government spokesman officially denied a charge by the Yugoslav agency Tanyug that two Greek planes strafed a Yugoslav outpost in the village of Nikolich, near Lake Doiran, killing a commander and wounding two soldiers.

Truman Hits Satellite Rule

that the governments of these countries not only have disregarded the will of the majority of these people but have resorted to measures of oppression against them."

He added that establishment of peace would mean withdrawal of all occupation forces and the end of control commissions provided by the armistice.

Ratification of the treaties will not result in withdrawal of Soviet troops from Hungary and Romania, where they are being maintained to protect communications with Russian forces in Austria. United States officials hoped, however, that the end of complete occupation control would give greater freedom to non-Communist elements in the Communist controlled countries.

His statement on the Balkan treaties follows:

'At the time of ratification of the treaties establishing peace with Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria, I feel I must publicly express regret that the governments of those countries not only have disregarded the will of the people, but have resorted to measures of oppression against them.

"Ever since the liberation of these countries from the Nazi yoke and the commitments undertaken by the three Allies at Yalta, I had hoped that governments truly representative of the people would be established there. Such governments do not exist today in those three countries.

'It is, however, in the interests of the Hungarian, Romanian and Bulgarian peoples to terminate the state of war which has existed between their governments and the United States for over five years.

"The establishment of peace will mean that all occupation forces (not including Soviet units needed to maintain lines of communication to the Soviet zone of occupation in Austria) will be withdrawn from these countries and armistice control commissions terminated."

Mr. Truman's statement on the Italian peace treaty follows:

"With the ratification of the treaty of peace with Italy we bring to a close an unhappy chapter in Italian-American relations. At the same time we mark the beginning of a new era for Italy to which the Italian people can look with hope and confidence. Certain of the terms of the treaty are not in full accord with our desires. But the reestablishment of peace does provide a foundation for building anew a strong, free and democratic Italy. And within the framework of the United Nations it should be possible to secure such changes in the treaty clauses as may be required in the light of future experience.

"From the first days of the Allied liberation of Italy we found the Italian people as eager as we ourselves to destroy the tyrannies of fascism and nazism which had despoiled their country and destroyed their liberties. Marching by our side against the common foe, the Italian armed forces and the Italian people contributed mightily to the ultimate victory. This common sacrifice has strengthened the deep and lasting friendship between our two peoples.

"More than this, Americans have the satisfaction of standing at the side of Italy while her people, through adversity, are rebuilding with their own labors a new democracy and restoring their lost freedoms. During these most difficult years we have been able to do much to help the Italians to help themselves.

"In order that their victory, and ours, may be preserved—in order that their freedoms and their reborn democracy may live and grow as Italy again takes her rightful place of honor and leadership among the free nations of the world—Americans will continue to stand by the side of their Italian friends, to work with them in our common efforts to rebuild and to restore a free world at peace.

Dozens Turn Pepco Refunds Over to Children's Hospital

The Children's Hospital fund won fresh support yesterday.

It came from dozens of generous District residents, who agreed to permit refunds of electric bills paid months ago to be turned over to the institution's building fund.

The plan, warmly received by the public, has been indorsed by both the Washington Board of Trade and the Merchants and Manufacturers Association. If successful, it will help provide a good part of the $80,000 still needed to meet the hospital's $1,300,000 goal.

The Post alone received 18 coupon authorizations for refund donations to the hospital yesterday, but the majority were mailed directly to the Potomac Electric Power Co.

The plan provides that PEPCO consumers who are entitled to refunds up to $3.60 donate the money to the hospital fund. A coupon of authorization for the donation appears in today's Post. It may be mailed to the company or to Room 200 of The Post.

Under the refund procedure, no cash exchanges hands. The company merely will deduct the money from bills consumers receive in July and August.

When the hospital fund is reached, a new, fireproof building will be constructed to replace the 75-year-old structure on W st. between 12th and 13th sts. nw.

Hungary Fall Foreseen Here In February

By Phillip Hevenor
Post Reporter

The "disintegration" of Hungary was reported to the United States Government by the American Embassy in Budapest in early February, 1946.

The embassy report antedated the United States' extension of 30 million dollars in surplus property credits to Hungary and followed efforts by the American and British governments to secure cooperation from Russia in rehabilitating Hungary in March, 1946, and the United States' return of the 32-million-dollar Hungarian gold reserve from Germany in August, 1946.

H. F. Arthur Schoenfield, United States Ambassador to Hungary from December, 1945, until about a month ago, prepared the report which stated:

"It is possible within a reasonably short time, Hungary will be a colony of Russia in an economic sense. It becomes more and more evident through successive although individual tentative steps that the Russians will steadily advance (the country's deterioration)."

U. S. Government Scored

Scoring the American Government for a lack of attention to the economy of Hungary and for "little" encouragement (by our economic policy) given to those Hungarians who blocked the penetration of the Russians, the embassy reported:

1. The expenses of the Hungarian government for the month of February, 1946, would probably exceed the five million millions mark, and a new issue of currency will be necessary to finance almost all of the astronomical figure.

2. The value of the American dollar in terms of Hungarian currency rose from 800,000 to 1,800,000 pengo during the week of February 15, 1946.

3. The time is "rapidly approaching" when the currency of Hungary will no longer be acceptable as an exchange medium.

Barter to Replace Coin

4. The only economic activity possible in the near future will be on a barter basis and since the greatest part of the population is rural and agricultural, most can survive on barter.

5. The urban population, depending on money for income, will be desperate. Urban centers such as Budapest will experience looting and rioting, especially if labor is incited.

6. The hopeless feeling frequently expressed by leaders in Hungary, concerning the financial deterioration, indicates strongly that Russian economic proposals now being negotiated will be accepted by the Hungarians.

One official comment on this last point was:

"People who are threatened with immediate chaos and who are preoccupied with survival are ineffective fighters, and an economy that does not have any transport, food, war materials and machines finds it difficult to turn down the offer of any assistance no matter what the price is."

Disintegration Began in '45

Russia, unwilling to accept the American offer to cooperate in the rehabilitation of Hungary—barred assistance from other sources, and assisted in the distintegration of Hungary as a part of the Russian strategy of penetrating the country economically.

The American Embassy advised that this strategy was working and the problems of disintegration had been going on since the summer of 1945.

The report commented on the probable outcome of Russia's strategy with the following remarks:

"As soon as Russia's economic penetration is completed, the Soviets will take interest in Hungary's rehabilitation, but this interest will not take place earlier.

"At the propitious time it will be to Russia's interest to reinstate the economy of Hungary and create the productivity of the newly won Hungarian-located Russian interests. It should be expected that Moscow will decide that the reconstruction of Hungary will need foreign capital and that America should provide it. The United States will be face-to-face with the choice between no aid to Hungary, or assistance to that country that will benefit Russia primarily."

To Discuss X-Ray Plan

The proposed city-wide mass X-ray service will be discussed by Dr. James J. Feffer, vice president of the District of Columbia Tuberculosis Association, today over radio station WINX at 4:30 p. m.

D. C. Traffic Sign Views to Be Aired

District citizens will voice their views to the Commissioners tomorrow on whether certain traffic stop signs should be removed from the Sixth and Eight precincts.

The public hearing will begin at 10 a.m in the District Building board room.

Traffic Director George E. Keneipp recommended removal of the signs at "isolated intersections" after a three-month survey.

cism and the world-wide struggle between communism and anti-communism is taking shape today.

"In the face of these dangers the U. N. (United Nations) appears helpless."

"During the 1939-1945 war, the Argentine government did not cease to help by every means the war effort of Germany and Italy," the report said. "In particular, it gave shelter and protection to Nazi agents and organizations as well as to the economic and financial potential which Germany had sent to Argentina before her defeat.

"In spite of the efforts of the United States and the substitution of Ambassador (George) Messersmith's 'friendly policy' for that of Ambassador (Spruille) Braden, neither the feeling nor the political line of Argentina has undergone the slightest change.

"Four chief agents of Nazi Germany—Ludwig Freude, Ricardo Staudt, Fritz Mandl and Heinrich Doerge—who acted as advisers to the government of Buenos Aires during the war, are still its advisers today.

"Not only has President (Juan D.) Peron refused to expel them as the United States demanded, but he has answered this demand by appointing as his secertary Rudi Freude, son of (Heinrich) Freude, whose expulsion as Nazi agent No. 1 had been asked for.

Good News For Folks Who Suffer From ✓ STOMACH GAS
✓ SOUR FOOD TASTE
✓ ACID INDIGESTION

Do you feel bloated and miserable after every meal, taste sour, bitter food? If so, here is how you may get blessed relief from this nervous distress.

Everytime food enters the stomach a vital gastric juice must flow normally to break-up certain food particles; else the food may ferment. Sour food, acid indigestion and gas frequently cause a morbid, touchy, fretful, peevish, nervous condition, loss of appetite, underweight, restless sleep, weakness.

To get real relief you must increase the flow of this vital gastric juice. Medical authorities, in independent laboratory tests on human stomachs, have by positive proof shown that SSS Tonic is amazingly effective in increasing this flow when it is too little or scanty due to a non-organic stomach disturbance. This is due to the SSS Tonic formula which contains special and potent activating ingredients.

Also, SSS Tonic helps build-up non-organic, weak, watery blood in nutritional anemia—so with a good flow of this gastric digestive juice, plus rich red-blood you should eat better, sleep better, feel better, work better, play better.

Avoid punishing yourself with overdoses of soda and other alkalizers to counteract gas and bloating when what you so dearly need is SSS Tonic to help you digest food for body strength and repair. Don't wait! Join the host of happy people SSS Tonic has helped. Millions of bottles sold. Get a bottle of SSS Tonic from your drug store today. SSS Tonic helps Build Sturdy Health.

Argentina Says U. S. to Name Bruce as Envoy

Buenos Aires, June 14 (AP).—James C. Bruce, vice president of the National Dairy Products Corp., has been designated as United States Ambassador to Argentina to succeed the career diplomat George Messersmith, the Argentine Foreign Office said today.

Bruce

The designation was accepted by Argentina, clearing the way for President Truman to propose Bruce's name to the United States Senate. The procedure of asking Argentina's approval was in line with diplomatic protocol, but it is unusual for a country receiving a new ambassador to make the first announcement of his selection.

Messersmith, credited here with smoothing American relations with Argentina, will leave Buenos Aires June 20. The pro-government Argentine press has unanimously deplored Messersmith's resignation.

Messersmith became Ambassador to Argentina after Spruille Braden, outspoken critic of the regime of President Juan Peron, left the post to be Assistant Secretary of State for Latin America. Messersmith's resignation virtually coincided with the announcement that Braden had resigned from the State Department. One Argentine paper shortly afterward criticized the State Department for having "sacrificed Messersmith on the altar of Braden's ego."

Bruce's previous diplomatic experience dates back to 1919, when he was assistant military attache in Italy and an American representative to the peace conference between Albania and Montenegro following World War 1.

Bruce is 54 years old, a native of Baltimore and a resident of Eccleston, Md. He maintains an office at 230 Park ave., New York. Long prominent in banking circles, he is a director in numerous enterprises.

Bruce is the son of William Cabell Bruce, former United States Senator from Maryland.

3d World Bloc Reported as Aim of Peron

By Virginia Prewett

Buenos Aires, June 14.—President Juan Peron has told his congressional supporters that Argentina soon will bid publicly for leadership of a "third world group," which will be neither "Communist" nor "imperialist," reports the afternoon newspaper, Critica, which is close to government sources.

Argentina wants to head a "third bloc" of Latin-American nations and Latin-European nations to offset world groupings headed by the United States and Russia, it was reported.

Peron will soon announce this officially, says Critica.

Meanwhile Peronist deputies in the wildest scenes witnessed in congress here the other afternoon repeatedly stopped attempts of an opposition deputy, Silvano Santander, to present documentary proofs of his charges that high government officials are involved in irregularities.

Santander named Miguel Miranda, president of the Central Bank, and Alberto Dodero, shipowner, now residing at President Peron's home. While he shouted, "I have documentary proofs," Ricardo Guardio, Peronist president of the chamber, repeatedly rang the bell to drown his words.

The Peronist sector of the chamber stopped Santander every time he approached the subject.

IT HAPPENS IN TWO SECONDS
Within two seconds after hitting the starting line, a racing speedboat can roar through the water at 140 m.p.h.

Test shows how fast Bayer Aspirin disintegrates in your stomach!

And as this glass-of-water test proves, within two seconds after you take Bayer Aspirin, it's ready to go to work, to bring FAST PAIN RELIEF

No less amazing than the breath-taking speed of a mighty racing boat is Bayer Aspirin's 2-second disintegrating action. This swift action is the result of three important manufacturing steps—not just one. And because of it, Bayer Aspirin is ready to go to work almost instantly, to bring you fast relief from ordinary headache, neuritic or neuralgic pain.

What's more, Bayer Aspirin's single active ingredient is so effective doctors regularly prescribe it for pain relief . . . and so gentle to the system they have mothers give it even to small children. And of all pain relievers, none can match Bayer Aspirin's record of use by millions of normal people—without ill effect.

Coalition Policy Idea Backed

By The Associated Press

The friendly notice of Senator Vandenberg (R.-Mich.) on the administration yesterday that the time has come for Republican and Democratic leaders to size up together the long-range job on foreign affairs won prompt support from both leading Democrats and Republicans in Congress, although Chairman Taft (Ohio) of the Senate Republican Polic. Committee was, perhaps significantly, silent.

Declining comment on the Vandenberg statement, Taft told reporters that the Senate-House Economic Committee, which he heads, plans to make it own full-scale inquiry into the effect of possible foreign aid programs on the domestic economy.

"We want to find out the effect on taxes, production and prices of these proposed programs to rehabilitate foreign nations," he said. "We expect to get some expert testimony on the amount of money likely to be involved as well as the volume of goods which might be shipped abroad."

Taft, who recently clashed verbally with President Truman over the effect of foreign aid programs on domestic prices, said the committee will begin its general hearings June 23.

Vandenberg's look-before-we-leap admonition won the support of Chairman Bridges (R., N. H.) of the Senate Appropriations Committee, which must approve foreign aid expenditures.

"I think it's an excellent idea," the New Hampshire Senator told a reporter. "I hope the Administration will give this suggestion prompt attention."

Dewey Asks Fight Against 'Isms'

Hamilton, N. Y., June 14 (INS).—Gov. Thomas E. Dewey told more than 2000 Colgate University alumni tonight that the colleges of the United States must place emphasis on the teaching of Americanism as their contribution to the present war against "aggressive totalitarianism."

The Governor, who received an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from Colgate, declared:

"If we are going to maintain our American system, we must add emphasis to a few things in our present education. We must teach reverence and love for the most creative and productive nation in the world.

"We should teach respect for the free economic processes which, in competition with the stateism wihch has demoralized the rest of the world, has continuously raised our country to the highest economic level

"In academic circles as elsewhere today," he said, "the debate rages between human rights and a police state—between freedom and slavery.

"I do not believe there is any legitimate ground for debate among Americans on that subject. As we expand higher education, the urgent need is for an affirmation of faith in the system which makes its existence possible.

"Confronted with the expansive force of aggressive totalitarianism we shall be less than adequate if we seek merely to preserve the traditions of freedom. We must not merely defend, we must go forward . . .

Benton Accuses AP Chief Of 'Misleading' in His Talk

By The Associated Press

The State Department made public last night a letter from Assistant Secretary of State William Benton to Kent Cooper, executive director of the Associated Press, contending that a Government information program is necessary to develop understanding of the United States abroad.

The letter replied to a recent speech by Cooper in which he said that international amity can best be attained by international news exchange through the press and its news agencies.

Declaring that "the United States is today grossly, shockingly and dangerously misunderstood by the peoples of many important countries," Benton said he and Cooper "can agree on these two things the United States Government ought to do":

"1. It ought to move as it can to advance the cause of universal freedom of information, and

"2. It ought to encourage the activities of private, competitive agencies in the communications field."

Cites "Opposing Argument"

"Beyond these steps," Benton continued, "you seem to be arguing that we do nothing—that we revert to status quo ante bellum. The opposing argument is that we shuold never again be caught so helpless; that the Government must act to fill the information gaps that are now so glaring, in order that foreign peoples will not again be so easily misled about us; and that the Government's method must be to give facts, and nothing but facts, openly and candidly and steadily in those areas and via those media not open to private channels or not profitable to them. If and as private agencies develop in these areas and media, the Government should withdraw."

Benton wrote that Cooper's "speech contains numerous specific misconceptions and misleading statements" and continued:

"As you use the word 'propaganda' throughout your speech to describe the informational activities of the State Department, you are prejudging the question by raising associations of dishonesty, malice and evil intent. . . .

"In your sense I deny—flatly and categorically—that the Department of State is engaged in propaganda. No responsible newspaperman who has taken the trouble to study the department's operation has so far described it. . . .

Names Five Not Served

"You say that 'all countries of any importance actually avail themselves' of the news reports of the United States wire services. The fact is that a number of countries either do not get these reports or process them beyond all recognition. Hungary, Poland, Romania, Yugoslavia and Iran, among others, get no reports. The Soviet Tass agency get the AP report, but I am sure you agree with me that Russian newspapers cannot, even in the most farfetched sense, he said to have 'AP service.' . . .

"You refer to the Government as being in the 'news agency business,' yet you concede that the State Department's information program is not regarded by the wire services as being competitive. Thus your use of the phrase 'news agency business' seems hardly accurate . . .

"You say that the American people have no way of checking up on what the State Department is saying abroad 'that might lead us all to catastrophe.' In saying this, you underrate the rigid policing provided by our listeners and readers. You underrate Congress. You under rate your own staff both here and abroad. You underrate the thousands of American businessmen living abroad, and those serving in our missions. It is all on the record."

Check 'Voice' Loyalty First, FBI Is Asked

By The Associated Press

Assistant Secretary of State William Benton said yesterday that the FBI, now engaged in investigating the loyalty of Government employes, has been asked to check first on "Voice of America" personnel.

The "Voice of America" is the short-wave broadcasting in foreign languages done by the State Department. In congressional controversy over the broadcasts, there have been charges they do not always follow State Department policy.

Benton told about the request to the FBI in testifying before a Senate appropriations subcommittee.

Real Estate Board Hales I. R. Bowen

I. Russell Bowen, Arlington, real estate man, is scheduled to appear before the District Real Estate Commission tomorrow to explain his definition of "timber."

Bowen, whose address is 5131 Columbia Pike, Arlington, is licensed as a real estate broker under District law. He faces charges on five counts of misrepresentation in connection with the sale here of approximately 144 acres in Prince William County, Va., and 272 acres in Shenandoah County, Va.

Public hearings of the charges will begin at 9:30 a. m. tomorrow in Room 103, District Building. John J. Donnelly, jr., assistant corporation counsel assigned to the case, announced.

Raymond and Ethel Mintz, 1900 F st. nw., charge they made a deal for the properties because Bowen told them more than 750,000 board feet of lumber could be cut from timber on the land.

Investigation revealed only 25,000 board feet of lumber could be obtained from the timber, they allege.

Three preliminary hearing sessions were held earlier this month.

Do YOU want to stop—but CAN'T?

DOES
ALCOHOLIC EXCESS
STAND BETWEEN YOU AND SUCCESS?

If you are one of those unfortunates whom alcohol is depriving of health and opportunity, remember this: Drunkenness is a disease and as such is subject to control. The McTaggart System functions on this basis. Its pure vegetable liquids destroy totally the taste or craving for alcohol and free one from all need or desire for this stimulant. In fact they create an antipathy to it. The nervous, digestive and circulatory systems are naturally benefited. No hospitalization of any kind is needed.

THIS IS STRICTLY A HOME SYSTEM

It does not interfere in any way with daily business or social routine. Effects are noticeable within a few days. While it is eliminating the alcohol from the system it is supplying a substitute which is temporarily needed, but this substitute is a purely vegetable tincture and is non-narcotic. Therefore stimulants are discontinued without any inconvenience. With the craving for alcohol gone, no will power is required for continuous abstinence from drink. The cost is very moderate and is covered many times over by the financial savings effected. Write for literature.

IMPORTANT—Dr. McTaggart's System has a 40-year record of accomplishment. It is sold with the distinct understanding that if at the end of the prescribed period results are not entirely satisfactory its purchase price will be promptly refunded.

Sponsors of Wallace Speech Branded Communist Front

nounced the CIO for its "Red-baiting' attack."

Wallace's speech at the Watergate Monday night will be his first in Washington since his dramatic departure from the Cabinet in a disagreement with President Truman over this Nation's foreign policy.

The speech at 10 p. m. is scheduled to be carried on WINX and WWDC.

Tickets, priced at $3.60, $2.40, $1.80, and 60 cents are on sale at the conference ticket office, 1307 H st. nw., and at the Washington Cooperative Bookshop, which has been labeled a Communist front by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Proceeds from admission charges will be used "to promote democracy in Democracy's Capital," according to Joseph L. Johnson, chairman of the Washington committee.

Favors Nonsegregation

First plank in the "Civil Rights Program" of the conference is District self-government and representation in the national Government, and, second, a complete nonsegregation policy, including, "the right of every resident of the District of Columbia to the opportunity to live where he will, to send his children to the nearest school, to choose his own physician and hospital, to compete for employment on the basis of skill and qualification, to equal use of all facilities open to the general public and to participation in the culture of the Nation's Capital."

The Southern Conference is billing the Wallace speech as his "national homecoming address."

The Associated Press reported from Moscow yesterday that Tass, official Soviet news agency, is terming the Wallace speaking tour of the United States "a success." Tass speculates on the possibility that Henry Wallace, "regarded here as a good friend of Russia," might run for the Presidency as a third-party candidate in 1948.

The Anti-Communist Association, whose president is Representative Alvin O'Konski (R., Wis.), is seeking an injunction in United States District Court here tomorrow to forbid the Interior Department to allow the Southern Conference to use the Watergate, part of the public parks system, for the Wallace address.

Many Congressmen Opposed

Interior Secretary Julius A. Krug has turned the matter over to Attorney General Tom C. Clark. Many members of both parties on Capitol Hill, including some on the Un-American Activities Committee, are opposed to the move, on the ground that such an action would interfere with the constitutional right of free speech.

Charles O'Malley, department commander, Veterans of Foreign Wars, announced last night that he would appear in District Court Monday to object to the appearance of Wallace at the Watergate. The VFW spokesman charged that Wallace "either willingly or unwillingly" is allowing himself to be used "as an instrument in furthering communism."

Released at Noon

The 17-page House report on the Southern Conference was released to the press at noon yesterday. It had been carefully guarded against possible leaks.

Almost simultaneously with its release, the Southern Conference issued a "reply" in which it termed the report "a dull rehash of previously discredited material."

The report lists Wallace as one of the advisory associates of the Southern Conference.

Of his scheduled speech here the report has only this to say:

"The Washington committee of the conference obtained Henry Wallace, foremost critic of President Truman's foreign policy, for a public speech in the Nation's Capital, June 16, 1947. The committee scheduled on the same program, Zero Mostel, a favorite entertainer at Communist affairs, and a member of the American Youth for Democracy, formerly the Young Communist League."

Of the Washington Committee of the Southern Conference the report states:

"President Truman's foreign policy in Greece and Turkey came in for abuse at the annual meeting of the conference's Washington committee in Washington, D. C., on April 17, 1947. . . .

"Entertainer at the Washington meeting was Susan Reed, employed by Cafe Society, a night club owned by Barney Josephson, brother of Leon Josephson, leading Communist, Soviet secret service operative, charged with passport frauds. Mrs. Leon Josephson also owns an interest in this enterprise. Barney Josephson has been a supporter of the New York branch of the Southern Conference."

Ruth McKenney Mentioned

Executive secretary of the Washington committee is Robert Ware Straus, "who tried to get an OEM job for Ruth McKenney," when Straus was information director of the wartime Office of Emergency Management, the report said. (Ruth McKenney has been expelled from the Communist Party for following the Browder line instead of the more revolutionary line of William Z. Foster.)

"Sponsors of the Washington group include Norris and Samuel Rodman, brothers associated with the pro-Communist Metropolitan Broadcasting Co., and Mrs. Gifford Pinchot, a delegate to the Communist-controlled Women's International Democratic Federation in Paris in 1945," the report continued.

Mrs. Michael Straus, wife of the Interior Department's Reclamation Commissioner, is listed as a member of the Washington Committee's Executive Board.

The committee charged that the Southern Conference for Human Welfare has consistently followed the Communist Party line despite the terrific battles put up within the organization by some genuine liberals.

Opposed Allied Loans

During the Communist-Nazi pact, in 1940, a meeting of the conference, attended by 1000 delegates, adopted resolutions denouncing war and "pro-Allied propaganda," the report stated. The conference declared itself, "unalterably opposed to loans to the Allies and other belligerents."

Dr. Frank P. Graham, present honorary president, and W. R. Couch of the University of North Carolina, led the battle against the resolutions, the report stated, and won a "consolation" of a resolution denouncing aggression by Nazis, Communists or imperialists.

As soon as Russia was attacked, the conference began to devote itself to "the South's part in winning the war for democracy," the report said.

At the end of World War II, the conference again "veered once more in line" with the new policy of the Communist Party, the committee told the House.

All of the various foreign policy switches "serve to clinch the charge that the organization is merely a pliable instrument in the hands of pro-Communist wire-pullers behind the scenes," the report stated.

He quoted Robert F. Hall, then secretary of the Communist Party of Alabama and now Washington correspondent of the Daily Worker, as writing in The Communist in 1939 that the Southern Conference for Human Welfare "was a brilliant confirmation of the line of the democratic front advanced by Comrade Browder at the tenth convention" of the Communist Party.

The report said that "in the early history of the organization, some well-intentioned individuals were misled into joining. Many of them have since severed their connections on learning its true character."

One of those who severed his connection was Henry H. Fowler, chairman for Virginia, who resigned April 28, 1947, after the State committee rejected an anti-Communist plank. Fowler said the decisive factor in his position "is the absence of any clear and positive stand against communism and the inclusion of Communists in the working organization and the unwillingness of my own State committee to initiate steps which would require a facing of this issue."

Of Clark Howell Foreman, president of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, the report states that he has no open affiliation with the Communist Party. He has frequently denied any affiliations or connections. He has been most successful in confusing the people as to the Communist-front character of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare."

"Foreman," the report said, "is associated with the Progressive Citizens of America, an allegedly liberal organization which believes in cooperating with Communists.

"He has also been affiliated with the following Communist-front groups: The Win-the-Peace Conference; the Washington Committee for Democratic Action, which defended Communists cases before the Civil Service Commission; and the National Citizens Political Action Committee."

James Dombrowski, executive secretary of the conference, is listed by the committee as the signer of a statement defending the Communist Party in March, 1941 (during the Soviet-Nazi honeymoon), and as a speaker for the National Conference for Constitutional Liberties, denounced as a Communist-front by former Attorney General Francis Biddle.

Dr. Graham, honorary president of the conference, "is not a Communist" according to the report and has had his differences with the Communist Party.

"He is, however," the report added, "one of those liberals who show a predilection for affiliation to various Communist-inspired front organizations."

At New Orleans, Dombrowski yesterday termed the condemnation of the committee as "un-American itself," according to the Associated Press. Dombrowski said the committee had never given the conference or its officers a hearing.

Foreman said the conference has conferred with the American Civil Liberties Union on plans for a large-scale investigation of un-Americanism, particularly in the South."

He said among those suspected of un-Americanism who should be invited to testify are "The Ku Klux Klan, the Columbians, Representative J. Parnell Thomas, and the House Committee on Un-American Activities."

In conclusion the committee said that the following acid test reveals "the true character of the SCHW:

1. It shows unswerving loyalty to the basic principles of Soviet foreign policy.

2. It has consistently refused to take sharp issue with the activities and policies of either the Communist Party, USA, or the Soviet Union.

3. It has maintained in decisive posts persons who have the confidence of the Communist press.

4. It has displayed consistent anti-American bias and pro-Soviet bias, despite professions, in generalities, of love for America.

In New York last night Wallace said he would discuss his recent speaking tour and his impression of public reaction to foreign and domestic policies in a radio speech from 12:30 p. m. to 12:45 p. m. Sunday, June 22, over the CBS network.

A debate on the Southern Welfare Conference is scheduled over WINX at 12:15 p. m. today on Ed Hart's forum, "Is Congress Doing Its Job?"

Speakers will be O'Konski for the Anti-Communist Association and Foreman on behalf of the conference.

Davies Denies White House Pressure for Pro-Red Films

By The Associated Press

Joseph E. Davies yesterday denied that pressure from the White House during the Administration of the late President Roosevelt led to Hollywood motion picture studios producing such pictures as "Song of Russia" and "Mission to Moscow."

Davies, Ambassador to Russia from 1936 to 1938, told reporters at a news conference that he has written Chairman J. Parnell Thomas (R., N. J.), disputing statements attributed to a House Subcommittee on Un-American Activities which is investigating reports of Communist infiltration in the movie industry.

The subcommittee said after a preliminary hearing in Hollywood that "some of the most flagrant Communist propaganda films were produced as a result of White House pressure."

The group did not say when or to whom the pressure was applied, or who was in the White House at the time. During the hearings film actor Robert Taylor testified a Government representative forced him to appear against his will in the picture "Song of Russia," which he considered Russian propaganda.

Davies said he has "scrupulously kept out of the wave of hysteria sweeping the country" but purported testimony before the subcommittee "shocked" him into a reply.

He made public his letter to Thomas describing as "not true" statements he said have been attributed to movie producer Col. Jack Warner that Davies acted "as liaison man who carried to Hollywood orders from the late President Roosevelt to make the picture "Mission to Moscow."

Davies told reporters "I did not think Thomas or his committee would wish to tarnish the living or the dead on insufficient evidence."

Solicitor General Nominee Denies Charges Against Him

Philip B. Perlman of Baltimore, nominee for solicitor general, yesterday answered categorically all charges which have been leveled at him and denounced opposing witnesses as "reckless and irresponsible".

In two hours of testimony before a two-man subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Perlman produced a series of documents to support his charges that evidence against his was fabricated or based on misunderstanding.

Charge Influence Used

Principal witnesses against Perlman have been A. Francis Ritota, president of the Park Heights Civic Improvement Association of Baltimore, and representatives of National Housewives, Inc., of which Miss Aimee Weber of Baltimore is president. These witnesses charged that Perlman employed political influence to procure legislation and other favors for the Baltimore Transit Company and other clients.

Perlman declared that such charges involved, as well as himself, several Governors of Maryland and mayors of Baltimore, the Maryland legislature, the Baltimore City Council, and many judges of Baltimore and Maryland courts.

"The witnesses who have appeared against me," he told the subcommittee, "are reckless, irresponsible, and have no idea of the meaning of the statements they have made or their reflection on the lives of some of the most respectable people of Baltimore and the State of Maryland."

Publicity Called Unfair

He described publicity given charges that he had "tampered" with a Baltimore grand jury in 1922 as "most unfair, most unjust". The charges, made by an opposing attorney in a criminal trial, were submitted to a subsequent grand jury, Perlman said, and found "unwarranted."

An extract from the grand jury report was placed in the record by Perlman. It said the charges had "misled" many citizens and it found "no evidence whatever to substantiate such charges." The accusation had been brought before the subcommittee in a letter by Peter Quinn, convicted of falsifying tax records.

Perlman also submitted for the record a letter from former Judge Robert F. Stanton to Chairman Ferguson (R., Mich.), which said "it was clear to me at the time that Mr. Perlman had done nothing which jusitfied any criticism, even by the attorney for the man on trial." Stanton presided during the trial of Quinn.

When Ferguson said Stanton's letter already was part of the record, Perlman said "I have never heard it mentioned . . . I had no way of knowing."

Miss Weber had accused Perlman of "dominating" the president of Baltimore City Council and appearing on the floor during its deliberations over reducing a tax on gross receipts of the street railway company. At that time, Perlman explained, Council was sitting as a committee of the whole, hearing testimony on the measure and "the opposition appeared as well as I did."

Says Membership Small

He described the National Housewives as "not national and not composed entirely of wives. As far as I know its membership is not more than five, 10 or 15 people."

Statements by Ritota that Perlman used his influence to obtain a city garbage disposal contract for the E. T. Foreman Co. were "false from beginning to end," Perlman said. He explained that he did not represent the Foreman company when the contract was awarded and "nobody was in position to obtain the contract by influence," since the contract was awarded on sealed bids.

Another charge of Ritota's that when the city undertook its own garbage collection and disposal the Foreman company sold the city "all its worn-out equipment" was denied by the nominee. He said a check of records revealed that the company sold the city only eight trucks at a price $500 below that fixed by an independent appraiser.

"Mr. Foreman is dead now," Perlman said, "and I do, as his attorney and friend, resent this stupid and malicious attack on him and on me."

Racial Feeling Cited

The witnesses charged Ritota with stirring racial feeling in his effort to prevent a Japanese firm from constructing a brush factory on land it had owned in 1941. Ritota had said Perlman used his influence with the Mayor to prevent adoption of an ordinance to rezone the land for use as a playground, a statement which Perlman described as "inaccurate."

He said the land in question had been bought by the Sekine Co., of which a Japanese, I. B. Sekine, was president, more than a year before Ritota and his associates brought forward their objections to its use for a factory.

The land lay, Perlman said, in a tract which "always" had been zoned commercial and was abutted by a railway line and a number of heavy industries already operating. Ritota "and his associates," Perlman said, succeeded in having council pass an ordinance rezoning the land owned by Sekine for residential use.

Asked by Ferguson if he had urged the Mayor not to sign the ordinance, Perlman said he did not know whether it had been signed or not. It would make no difference as far as Sekine was concerned, he said, since the property already had been purchased for commercial use and construction had been started, which would remove it from application of the ordinance.

What eventually transpired, he said, was that he advised Sekine to sell the property to the city and go elsewhere, since a great deal of opposition to him had been incited by the controversy. This Sekine did, Perlman said, at a loss of $8000 and the property was put to use as a playground.

"If Mr. Ritota wants to give anybody credit for that playground", Perlman said, "he should give it to me. They got the playground because of the advice I gave Mr. Sekine".

The hearing was adjourned until Monday at 2 p. m. to make way for another committee meeting. Ferguson later said he hoped to conclude hearings on the nomination this week.

Among witnesses who have appeared before the Ferguson subcommittee to urge Perlman's confirmation have been the entire Maryland delegation in Congress and a large number of Baltimore and Maryland judges and lawyers. Letters from the Supreme Bench of Baltimore and from the president and six past presidents of the Baltimore Bar Association, all urging his confirmation, have been placed in the record.

Million Acres Inundated by Record Floods in Midwest

The Missouri and the Des Moines Rivers, reaching new record flood crests, drove toward the swollen Mississippi, spreading their flood waters over vast areas of farmland, driving thousands from their homes, and bringing the threat of even greater disaster.

More than one million acres of land were inundated, an estimated 24,000 were homeless, and Army engineers have calculated the damage at 28 million dollars.

At Rulo, Nebr., the Missouri .3 of a foot above its record 20.59-foot level of 1944. Water stood over farmlands as far as the eye could see. Damage to corn and wheat crops, already severely retarded by unseasonably chill and wet weather, was extensive.

Meanwhile, upwards of 8000 residents of Ottumwa, Iowa, a city of 32,000 evacuated their homes, many of them the second time in a week. A new crest of the Des Moines, .2 of a foot higher than last week's record level, was reported at Tracy, 30 miles upstream from Ottumwa. Flood stage at Tracy was exceeded by 12 feet.

C. O. Tucker, Government weather observer at Burlington, Iowa, predicted that by the end of next week, a 100-mile stretch of the Mississippi River from Keokuk, Iowa to Louisiana, Mo., would experience its greatest flood in history.

The crest of the Mississippi which caved in levees along its Missouri and Illinois banks during the past week, approached St. Louis, approximately 6½ feet above the overflow stage after having reached record levels at Quincy, Ill., and Hannibal, Mo.

Heavy rains of the past few days in the Nebraska-Iowa-Missouri critical area had abated, but showers were forecast for parts of the flood States.

Slain Woman's Artist Spouse Under Arrest

Atlanta, June 14 (AP).—The French artist husband of Peggy Refoule, slain Atlanta society beauty, was arrested today on a morals charge, but police gave no word whether they are nearer a solution in the baffling month-old murder mystery.

Twice within the 12 hours immediately preceding his formal arrest, the 35-year-old husband, Paul, was interrogated under a lie detector about the murder of his 31-year-old wife.

Fulton County Police Chief Neal Ellis announced:

"We are not at all satisfied with Refoule's response to the lie detector questioning. The only time the apparatus indicated he told the truth was when he said, "I did not love my wife."

The morals charge, Ellis said, was based on an answer under the lie detector of a young woman who formerly was a student of Refoule. The woman was questioned last night with another woman and a young man. All were released, but Ellis said the man would be questioned further.

Ellis said Refoule had signed a statement admitting to the six perversion acts with which he is charged. Refoule denied the charges to reporters.

Refoule waived preliminary hearing and was ordered held with $10,000 bond.

Refoule's wife was found face up in Peachtree Creek May 14. She had been strangled. Jewelry she normally wore was missing. Police said she had been raped.

Mississippi Flood Control Fund Predicted

By The Associated Press

Representative Whittington (D., Miss.), predicted yesterday that the House Appropriations Committee will approve 24 million dollars for Mississippi River Valley flood control as recommended by President Truman.

Whittington discounted completely reports that the fund would be slashed. The President based his recommendation on requests of the Army Engineers.

The Federal Diary

—By Jerry Kluttz—

PAY SLASHES: A move is under way to drive down salaries of Federal workers at a time when a pay raise can be easily justified with living costs at a record high.

In approving operating funds for the score of independent Federal agencies, the House Appropriations Committee repeatedly demanded the downgrading and firing of what it described as "high-salaried" personnel.

But as the lower and middle grade employes in the War Department learned to their sorrow, the top grades can't be cut unless reductions are made down the line. In other words, downgrading has a chain effect and a reduction in grade for the boss can often mean the same thing for some of his employes.

The committee seems to have adopted the arbitrary downgrading plan of War Undersecretary Kenneth C. Royall as its own. It has put the pressure on all the independent agencies to slash grades, and in a few instances the downgrading would be required under riders to the supply bill.

But the Classification Act is still on the law books and it's the greatest protection against downgradings to Federal workers in this city. This law is administered by Civil Service. It's supposed to guarantee to the employe equal pay for equal work regardless of where he works in Government. Employes who are arbitrarily downgraded and whose duties remain unchanged have the right—and should—appeal to Civil Service.

But Civil Service would be helpless if a rider, recommended to the National Archives appropriation bill, becomes law. The provision would prevent any funds being used to pay the salary of any employe in grade P-4 or CAF-11 (starting salary $4902) if he had originally had a war service appointment. The rider would apply only to Archives employes. It's vicious and brutal and it can't possibly be defended.

The Federal Public Housing Administration is another agency which was given specific instructions by the committee to downgrade and fire in its middle and upper brackets. The committee found that FHPA pays 36 per cent of its employes $4500 or more annually. It put a rider onto its appropriation bill to limit 20 per cent of the agency's employes to that wage range.

Another rider would knock down some of the higher salaries in the Atomic Energy Commission. In creating this agency last year, the Congress recognized that many able people would not work for Uncle Sam under the $10,000 ceiling of the Classification Act. Everyone recognized that the AEC needed the very best people in the Nation and so the top-bracket jobs were exempted from that law.

A number of people accepted jobs in the commission at $10,000 and $12,000 salaries. But even so, the agency hasn't been able to get all the top people it needs and wants at those salaries. And it's sure to have even more trouble if the rider goes through. That rider would, in effect, place AEC jobs under the Classification Act as of November 30. The exception would be the jobs of those employes whose salaries are fixed by law, and scientific jobs. If written into law, this will be another instance of the Government reneging on a promise to its employes.

The Council of Economic Advisors has deliberately set out to have a small but high-caliber staff to advise the President and the Congress on the economic outlook. It has only 48 employes, far fewer than was generally predicted the agency would need. But the average salary is $6400 and the agency has been held up as a horrible example by the committee. Apparently the committee wants mediocrity in Government and the agency might have been applauded if it had had 100 people whose average was $3100.

In its report, the committee says flatly it believes the "agencies should effect a dowgrading or reduction in personnel in the upper brackets." It said low-paid employes had been the target for most reductions in force. The committee called on Budget Bureau and Civil Service to help correct "this inequitable situation."

Repeatedly, in both the committee report and in the hearings, cracks were taken at upgradings and high-bracket people. It claims the Maritime Commission record of upgradings is "astounding," and it went back to 1940 to try to prove it. The committee said that 1400 employes had been given raises of two or more grades in the last seven years, and it called on the agency to make a "downward revision of salaries."

But the committee failed to report that the raises were given out during the war years and that more employes were downgraded than upgraded at Maritime in the past year.

The hearings carry lists of employes who are paid $4000 and more in most of the agencies covered by the bill. However, in any sizable reduction of force such as is now in progress, it's inevitable that downgradings and reorganizations will follow in the normal course of events.

But there's one ray of hope shinning out of this bad news—the Flanders bill. On Tuesday the Senate Civil Service Committee will take up this measure that would raise the salaries of Cabinet members and other Federal officials. If this bill is approved, as it should be, it would be a definite brake on downgradings.

D. C. Tax Bill Faces Fight on Pension Item

The proposal to tax veterans' pensions totaling more than $3000 annually is expected to cause opposition to the new District income tax bill when it is brought before the Senate this week.

Veterans' organizations have protested that portion of the bill which was approved by the House before the organizations were aware of how they were affected by the bill. The House bill excludes only $2000 of a veterans' pension from District taxation.

Senator Harry P. Cain (R., Wash.), chairman of the District subcommittee that drew up the legislation and a veteran himself, said that increasing the sum to $3000 will eliminate a tax for all pensions paid to former soldiers and noncommissioned officers.

"We intend to exempt every penny of disability pension due to GI's and noncommissioned officers," said Cain.

Under Federal income tax laws all disability pensions are exempted from taxation.

Senator Cain said he also will offer an amendment to the bill exempting from taxation interest paid by the Government on payments made to widows and children of veterans who died in service. That provision was left out of the House bill inadvertently.

Another fight will be made to exclude Federal employes from income tax payments here. Representative Joseph P. O'Hara (R., Minn.), who succeeded with that proposal in the House, declared he will seek Senate support, too. But Senator Cain opposed it.

The entire revenue program will be called up for Senate action early this week.

Included in the group is the teachers' pay bill. Action may be delayed in the same manner because of opposition to one portion of the teachers' bill. The entire bill has been approved by the House.

Also to be called up Monday is the gun-toting bill. An amendment by Senator John S. Cooper (R., Ky.) would make it a felony instead of a misdemeanor to illegally carry lethal weapons.

The other pending bills remove the $10,000 limit in damages payable on accidental deaths, define property exempt from taxation here; and authorize the sale of District water to Falls Church.

Examination of the District Public Welfare budget was completed yesterday by Chairman Walt Horan (R., Wash.) of the House District Appropriations subcommittee. Very few drastic cuts have been made, it was reliably reported.

The subcommittee immediately began examination of the $25,191,800 request for District Public Works. Brig. Gen. Gordon R. Young, the engineer commissioner, and his staff explained the needs of the Department of Inspections, the Municipal Architect and superintendent of District Buildings.

to the hoods of automobiles, stranding a long line of motorists. The avenue, flooded to a depth of 3 feet, poured water through the doorways of two large shopping centers there.

A construction shack in use for the building of stores nearby was floated from its foundations.

Motorists were slowed to a crippling crawl at Peace Cross, Bladensburg, Md., the juncture of Bladensburg rd., Defense hwy. and Baltimore ave., where flood waters reached hubcap height.

The surface water run-off collected to a depth of 3 feet on New York ave. near Bladensburg rd. ne., forcing autoists to detour. One large interstate bus tried to barge through and became stalled in water over its huge wheels. The basement of the Fat Boy Restaurant, nearby, collected 2 feet of water, its proprietor reported.

Rock Creek's trouble spot, at Beach dr. and Military rd., filled up from creek overflow to hubcap depth.

In Rockville, Md., a wire fell on Montgomery ave. at the edge of the town, cutting off home lighting in the area for a brief spell yesterday afternoon.

Marucci, the victim of the heavy rains, operated a barber shop at 4th and N sts. nw. for the past 43 years. Friday night, while he and his wife, Margaret, were bailing out rain water almost a foot deep in their basement he collapsed, striking his head on the cellar wall.

Dr. James I. Boyd, Prince Georges County medical examiner, said the head injury was slight. Marucci, the doctor said, died of natural causes, an intracranial hemorrhage superinduced by the exertions. The dead man leaves his wife, two children and two stepchildren.

Free, seasonal advice to District residents on how best to meet summer's onslaught of heat was issued yesterday by Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer. He advises:

Avoid hurrying. Take a little more time in traveling, eating and sleeping.

Don't overeat. Eat less of everything but fruit and vegetables, and chew your food a bit longer.

Drink eight glasses of cool water daily. Substitutes recommended include fruit juice drinks, milk and buttermilk.

Acquire the salt habit. Take salt tablets with water. They make you drink more water and replenish salt losses of perspiration.

Wear cool, loose-fitting clothes.

Crittenton Home Gets $98,285 Gift

The Florence Crittenton Home will receive a $98,285 estate left by Miss Nina I. Thomas, local attorney, who died on May 28.

This was disclosed when petition for probate of her will was filed in District Court yesterday by the Metropolitan National Bank and Trust Co. of Washington, and Mrs. Grace Thomas Harwood of Miner Hill, Franklin Park, Va., executors.

Miss Thomas, who practiced estate and inheritance law here 35 years, directed that Mrs. Harwood, her sister, be assured of a life income from the estate. Upon her death, the estate is to be conveyed to the home.

Mrs. Harwood, wife of Col. Thomas E. Harwood, said her sister had toured the home once and had considered it "a very worthy cause." She said Miss Thomas had never taken an active interest in the organization, however.

Miss Thomas, who was born in Spotsylvania County, Va., moved here as a child with her family. She was graduated from Washington College of Law and passed her bar examinations in 1907 at the age of 20. Besides her sister, she is also survived by a brother, David R. Thomas of 1422 Shepherd st. nw.

Gen. Cox Asks Aid in Making Armory Policy

Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, commanding general of the D. C. National Guard, yesterday chose eight civilians to help determine policy for nonmilitary use of the new $2,750,000 National Guard Armory.

The move was seen as part of General Cox's strategy in his fight with District Commisssioners over who will control revenues produced by nonmilitary use

The Commissioners have already forwarded to the Buget Bureau a bill which would give them control of the armory for nonmilitary purposes.

Members of General Cox's eight-man advisory committee, which will hold its first meeting at the armory Tuesday, June 24, include:

Robert V. Fleming, president of Riggs National Bank; Edgar Morris, chairman of the Board of Trade's National Capital Committee; Alfred G. Neal, president of Potomac Electric Power Co.; Gardner Moore, manager of Shoreham Hotel; Carter Barron, Eastern Division Manager for Loew's Theaters, Inc.; Clifford H. Newell, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations; and Charles H. Hillegeist, president of the District Real Estate Board.

Auto Accidents Injure 7 Here, 2 Seriously

Seven persons were injured, two seriously, in four traffic accidents within the District yesterday.

Mrs. LaQuay

Three passengers in the cab and body of a dump-type truck were hurt, one seriously, when it overturned, while swinging left into 5th st. nw., at the foot of Franklin st. The driver, Walter E. Lewis, 22, of 1456 Corcoran st. nw., was charged with drunken driving and failure to give full time and attention to driving.

Seriously hurt was Timothy Williams, 35, of 1304 57th ave., Fairmount Heights, Md. He was admitted to Freedmen's Hospital suffering possible fractures of the skull, right ribs and right arm. Treated and released at the same hospital were Rosa L. Rogers, 19, possible fracture of the left arm, and Jeneta Funderberk, 27, injured left leg, both of 48 Eye st. nw. The accident occurred at 6:15 a. m.

A 69-qear-old woman, Nettie G. LaQuay, of 4701 40th ave. Hyattsville, Md., was injured seriously when her car collided with another at 17th and M sts. ne., at 10 a. m. She was taken to Casualty Hospital with contusions and abrasions of both hips and the right knee.

A passenger in her car, Jennie E. Magee, 45, of 4308 30th st., Mount Rainier, Md., suffered a cut over the right eye and laceration of the left forearm. She was treated and released at Casualty Hospital.

Police said the automobile driven by Crawford E. Boggs, 28, of 1907 L st. nw., collided with the left rear side of the LaQuay car, throwing Mrs. McQuay to the street. Boggs, uninjured, was charged with failure to yield the right of way and driving without a D. C. permit.

In another accident, at 2:40 p. m., Virginia Ann Dicks, 37, of 3200 Kenilworth ave., Hyattsville, Md., sustained minor head injuries when her automobile was struck by a truck at Bladenburg rd. and Eastern ave. ne. The truck knocked down a light standard after the collision.

Police charged the woman with failure to yield the right of way to the truck's driver, Murray Oakley, 26, of Richmond, Va.

A sailor pedestrian, Furman D. Wise, 19, stationed here, suffered abrasions and contusions of the left leg and left shoulder when struck by an automobile at noon on Independence ave. in front of the D. C. War Memorial, West Potomac Park. He was treated at the Navy Dispensary.

Older Drivers Face Tests

New Schedule of Collateral Set for Traffic Violations

Traffic violators and motorists 65 or older were given something to dwell upon yesterday.

For one thing, the judges of Municipal Court announced a new schedule of minimum collateral required of violators for District traffic laws.

Then, too, Traffic Director George E. Keneipp announced he is considering reexamination of drivers 65 and over as a traffic safety measure.

Older Drivers Go Slower

Although the accident rate of drivers this age seems small—they were held responsible for 28 accidents in May—Keneipp believes the inroads of age seriously impair driving ability.

Many elderly drivers compensate for slower reactions by greater caution, he said, but too many others are unaware of their deficiencies and make no allowance for them.

Re-examination of drivers of all ages is not feasible, he added. They are just too numerous. Age groupings make a good departure, though, he thinks.

Of 8022 permits issued here in May, 62 were to persons over 65, 55 to persons over 70. One fatal accident was charged to a driver over 65. He was killed when his car ran off the road.

Failure of persons over 65 to get licenses, according to Keneipp, is usually for the same reasons—difficulty in parking, not stopping for lights and stop signs and making wrong turns.

Revision of collateral figures was made by Municipal Court judges on the basis of recommendations from Traffic Inspector Arthur E. Miller. He said the new schedule tends to equalize fines on similar charges.

Function Held Judicial

Until the first District Traffic Conference two years ago, collateral was determined by the Commissioners. At the conference it was decided the function is judicial, not administrative.

Changes in the minimum collateral for traffic violations—effective July 1—are as follows:

Failure to make identity known—New, $200 bond or cash for property damage; $500 bond or cash for personal damage; old no set amount for bond.
Attention, fail give to operation—New, $10; old, $5.
Auto, improper riding on—New, $5; old, $2.
Backing, to turn without caution—New, $10; old, $5.
Bicycle, hitching on vehicle—New, $5; old, $2.
Riding two on bicycle—New, $5; old, $2.
Brakes, fail to set hand brake—New, $5; old, $2.
Bumper, no front—New, $3; old, $2.
No rear bumper—New, $3; old, $2.
Commercial vehicle, operating in park—New, $5; old, $2.
Curb, fail turn wheels to—New, $3; old, $2.
Curb, pull from, interfere moving traffic—New, $10; old, $5.
Cutting in, in traffic—New, $10; old, $5.
Mechanical condition, unsafe; operating—New, $25 cash or $100 bond; old, $20.
Permitting—New, $25 cash or $100 bond; old, $20.
Mirror, no rear view—New, $3; old, $5.
Motor, running unattended—New, $5; old, $2.

Transit Firm to Renew Bus Plea on Tuesday

Capital Transit Co.'s plea to substitute buses for streetcars on the eastern section of the Benning-Rosslyn line will be renewed Tuesday.

The Public Utilities Commission will reopen the case at a public hearing in the District Building board room, beginning at 10 a. m.

2d Suspect In Detective Shooting Held

The second "stop light" bandit who got away after an attempted holdup in which a detective was seriously wounded Friday night has been recaptured and identified as an escaped prisoner.

Baltimore police picked up the suspect at a Greyhound bus terminal in that city yesterday. He was turned over to authorities here on an extradition warrant and booked at Washington police headquarters as Charles H. Armstrong (alias Smooth) of Norfolk, Va., and Philadelphia, Pa.

He was said by police to have admitted firing the shot which pierced the right shoulder and passed into the chest of Detective Sergt. Joseph H. Hunt, 47, of 601 Hillwood ave., Falls Church, Va.

At Freedmen's Hospital, Hunt's condition is reported as serious.

The other bandit, identified as Joseph Jones, 22, of New York, is in Gallinger Hospital under police guard, with a gunshot wound in his left side.

Hunt and Precinct Detective Ernest P. Jefferson, 34, of 1300 Webster st. ne., were on a special detail at the time of the shooting at 10th st. and Rhode Island ave. nw. in an effort to trap the men who had been staging stop light robberies in the neighborhood.

While the detective halted at the intersection, two armed men approached their car, one at each window, and ordered the policemen to turn over their wallets.

As the detectives yanked out their guns, one bandit, identified as Armstrong, fired and hit Hunt, who returned fire. The gunmen turned and fled. Jefferson fired three shots. One bullet felled Jones and another nicked Armstrong, who disappeared down 10th st.

When nabbed in Baltimore, Armstrong said that after fleeing the scene he had entrained for Philadelphia where he changed his blood-stained shirt at a relative's home. He returned to Baltimore to catch a bus for Norfolk.

Armstrong is an escapee from a Virginia prison farm where he was finishing the first year of a six-year term for robbery, according to police.

Meanwhile, good news for Jefferson who joined the force in 1938 was announced yesterday by Inspector Walter H. Thomas, acting Superintendent of Police. He will be promoted to Detective Sgt. on Monday. His promotion had been approved before the gun duel, Thomas said.

Hunt, who is married and has two children, has been injured on duty at least five other times, including a bite on his right thigh in 1926 by a prisoner he had been guarding. He has received seven commendations for work on robbery and theft cases since his appointment to the force on March 1, 1922—the same day Inspector Thomas joined the force. Both started as rookies at the 10th precinct.

'Ideal Father' And Family To Be Feted

Today will be a pretty special one for John O. Riley, sr., 35, Washington police private.

And it won't be an ordinary Father's Day either, for his wife, Annabelle, and their three children, Mary Ann, 9, John, jr., 7, and James, 4.

For Riley is Greater Washington's Ideal Father for 1947.

Because of that, come 2 p. m., the Riley's and their brood will head for the Statler Hotel for a sumptuous dinner as guests of The Washington Post. At 5:45 p. m. they will be interviewed over WINX.

Later, the family will stop in for a show at the Capitol, where they will be introduced from the stage. Riley will be awarded a plaque.

Riley's daughter, Mary Ann, a student at the Janney School, submitted the winning letter in The Post's contest to select the ideal father.

Mary Ann, who was so elated at the choice of her dad she could scarcely speak, wrote The Post about her father.

"He works real hard so some day we can have a home of our own . . .

"We think our Daddy is the best Daddy in the world. He is a policeman and when we are sleeping at night, Daddy is out protecting us and other people . . .

"Mama and us always come first with Daddy."

The family lives at 4327 Harrison st. nw.

Criticism Of Jury Is Defended

Municipal Court Judge George D. Neilson last night defended his action in criticizing a jury that acquitted a District motorist of a negligent-homicide charge Thursday.

Replying to a charge by Senator William Langer (R., N. Dak.) that he had "interfered" with the jury when he termed its decision a miscarriage of justice, Judge Neilson declared:

"I have the highest regard for Senator Langer and I agree with him that a judge should not interfere with a jury or try to intimidate a jury. But in this particular case, and only after the verdict has been returned, I thought the judge should have told the jury of its disregard for the facts of the case.

"The facts were absolutely ignored, and the public must be protected against such things."

Senator Langer's criticism of Judge Neilson came after the jurist had assailed the jury acquitted Marvin B. Stephens of negligence in the traffic death of John B. Cook on March 31.

Potomac Paragraphs

'Motorized' Numbers Suspects Arrested

Antigambling squad detectives yesterday warred on motorized numbers writing, arresting four suspects in automobiles.

The squad, under command of Lieut. Roy Blick, first arrested Wilmore Stanard, 32, of 2926 12th st. ne., in an automobile at 13th st. and Park rd. nw. They took him to the Thirteenth Precinct station house and sallied forth again.

At 13th and W sts. nw. they arrested Leonard Gravette, 32, of 818 6th st. ne., and reported finding numbers slips in a secret compartment over the dashboard of his automobile.

Their third trip netted Mr. and Mrs. Paul Gray of 1250 Florida ave. nw., parked in an automobile near their home. The two were booked separately as Georgia Gray, 42, and Paul, 48.

All four arrested were released under $1500 bond each for hearing Monday before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage on charges of possession of illegal numbers' slips.

Utility Pole Is Casualty

A lightpole in front of 3217 Connecticut ave. and Porter st. tim yesterday at 9:27 a. m. to the pumper truck of No. 28 Engine Company.

The fire vehicle, en route to an automobile fire at 34th and Lowell sts. nw., was making a U-turn at Connecticut ave. and Porter sts. when its bumper ungently nudged the lightpole—which fell.

When the firemen arrived at the fire, flames, caused by a short circuit, were already snuffed out.

Eagles Dedicate Plaque

A bronze plaque, honoring the memory of all members of the Fraternal Order of Eagles who have died in their country's service, was dedicated at Arlington Cemetery yesterday.

In exercises at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, the plaque was presented to Col. Raymond J. Williams, officer-in-charge at the cemetery, by Edward F. Poss of Toledo, Ohio, a past grand worthy president of the order. The plaque will be permanently displayed in the cemetery's exhibit chamber.

The exercises were sponsored by the Grand Aerie, FOE., and were arranged locally by the Alexandria Aerie. Vincent Miles of Arlington, a member of the Alexandria unit, presided.

Wilson Goes on Trial

Floyd P. Wilson, 32, Riverdale, Md., carpenter, is scheduled to go on trial for his life in District Court tomorrow, charged with the hold-up slaying of Milton E. Lowe, on February 8.

Lowe, 45, father of three children, was shot down outside the Giant Food Center, 3924 Minnesota ave. ne., when he resisted turning over $10,000 in store receipts to an armed bandit. The victim, of 1526 Neal st., was taking the money to a bank for his brother-in-law, store manager.

Landmarks Defended

In a fight to save Alexandria's ancient homes and landmarks, city groups have named Marshall F. Allen of 800 S. Washington st. as chairman of a newly formed protest committee.

Committee members are being picked from civic bodies including the Alexandria Historical Society, Mount Vernon Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Alexandria Association, Garden Club of Alexandria, Alexandria Committee of Colonial Dames, and the American Association of University Women.

The committee hopes to "prevent a blanket rezoning of 100 to 200 blocks of North and South Washington st.," and to protest announced plans of the city council to raze ancient buildings.

That Was No 'Man'

That "man" lying in Rock Creek near the East-West Highway was just a dummy, the many motorists who reported "him" to the Montgomery County Police at Bethesda will be interested to know.

The dummy was used several days ago in safety demonstrations at a party given by the Montgomery gendarmerie for the school boy patrolmen of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase area and it was just tossed aside at the end of the demonstration.

Car Inspector Hurt

Robert K. Gingells, 32, 2227 Rusk st. ne., a car inspector for Washington Terminal, received head injuries yesterday when a brake handle he was removing from a coach spun around and hit him in the left temple. His condition was reported as not serious at Emergency Hospital.

Dent to Take Office

Theodore W. (Ted) Dent will be installed as president of the Hyattsville Lions Club at a Ladies' Night Party June 24 at Prince Georges Golf and Country Club.

Other new officers are Harry H. McFarlin, first vice president; Erving J. Dorrelle, second vice president; J. Burton Carrico, third vice president; Leslie C. Reeley, secretary-treasurer; Albert Heider, tailtwister; Albert C. Allison, lion tamer; William Moore and Cabell N. Pryor, directors for two-year terms.

Lions Club to Honor 2 Outstanding Cadets

The "outstanding cadets" at Woodrow Wilson High School in 1946 and 1947 have been honored by the Uptown Washington Lions Club for their achievements while members of the corps.

Selected as recipients of the Tobby Pelzman Award, a plaque to be awarded annually to the outstanding member of the school's cadet corps, were Paul Hofflund, 3530 Quebec pl. nw., a Princeton University student who won the cadet honor last year, and Robert Gibbs, 114 W. Thornapple st., Chevy Chase, Md., named the outstanding cadet this year.

The award is dedicated to the memory of Tobby Pelzman, a lifelong resident of Washington and a member of the Uptown Washington Lions Club at the time of his death.

Between-Rains Victim

Milton Brown, 37, of 121 16th st. se., was a between-rains victim yesterday. He suffered possible spinal injury and was admitted to Casualty Hospital after he fell while repairing his back porch roof which had leaked during the storms. The accident occurred at 6 p. m.

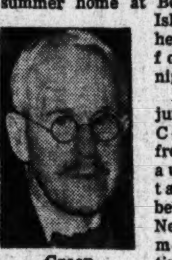
W. R. Green, Retired Judge, Dies in N. Y.

William R. Green, 91, retired judge of the United States Court of Claims, died Wednesday at his summer home at Bellport, Long Island, friends here were informed last night.



Green

The veteran jurist, former Congressman from Iowa and authority on taxation had been living in New York City most of the time since his retirement in May, 1940.

The body will be brought here for burial at 10 a. m. tomorrow in Rock Creek Cemetery, James A. Hoyt, of the Court of Claims staff, was informed.

Funeral services are to held today at the Church of the Ascension in New York.

Born in Connecticut

Judge Green, born at Colchester, Conn., began law practice at Dow City, Iowa, in 1882. He was judge of the District Court, 15th Judiciary District, in Iowa from 1894 to 1911, resigning to represent Iowa's Ninth District in the Sixty-second Congress.

He served in the House continually from 1911 to 1928, resigning to accept appointment to the Court of Claims. He was chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee from 1923 until his resignation. He also was chairman of the House-Senate Joint Committee on Internal Revenue from 1926 to 1928.

He was author of several books and pamphlets on taxation and tariff and a member of the Academy of Political Science and the Cosmos Club.

Surviving are a daughter, Mrs. Courtney Campbell of New York City, and a son, William R. Green, jr., of New Haven, Conn. His wife, Mrs. Luella Washington Brown Green, died in 1922.

The judge served on the Court of Claims bench several times for short periods since his retirement as temporary vacancies occurred. He had been in declining health for several years.

Judges of the Court of Claims will attend the burial in a body. Included in the group will be former Court of Claims Chief Justice Fenton W. Booth, retired, of Indianapolis.

Naval Guard Honors Walsh At Funeral

Clinton, Mass., June 14 (U.P.).—Hundreds of civic leaders and friends, headed by Republican Gov. Robert F. Braford, attended funeral services today for former Senator David I. Walsh, 74, who died Wednesday.

A solemn high mass of requiem was celebrated at St. John's Catholic Church for the Democratic leader who later was buried in the Walsh memorial plot alongside his father, mother, two sisters and a brother.

An honor guard and firing squad of Navy men was on hand in tribute to Walsh's years as chairman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee.

Flags were at half-staff on all public buildings of this town where Walsh started his career as a newsboy. They were lowered when Walsh's body was brought home to lie in state and will remain at half staff for 30 days.

Walsh died at the Cardinal O'Connell House of St. Elizabeth's Hospital after a cerebral hemorrhage.

He had been defeated for the Senate last year by Republican Henry Cabot Lodge, jr., after serving continuously for 20 years.

Dr. Houghton, Head of Bible Institute, Dies

Los Angeles, June 14 (AP).—Dr. Will H. Houghton, veteran Baptist clergyman and president of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, died unexpectedly today. He was 60 years old.

He was stricken ill in his apartment at the Ambassador Hotel and his wife, Elizabeth, had him removed to the Hollywood Receiving Hospital where he died shortly afterward.

Mrs. Houghton said her husband had been ill for about a year and had come here in hope of benefiting his health.

Dr. Samuel P. Benbrook, his physician, attributed the cleric's death to a heart attack.

Dr. J. A. Moon, director of the Moody Institute of Science, said Dr. Houghton yesterday morning had suffered a recurrence of the illness which had been afflicting him. Police said he locked himself in the bathroom last night. Mrs. Houghton summoned officers, who crashed the door and found the clergyman on the floor.

Radio Patrolman C. D. Gireux reported that he found a partially filled bottle of pills beside Dr. Houghton. The capsules have been turned over to police chemists for analysis.

Moon said Dr. Houghton had been suffering badly with migraine headaches and sometimes took sedatives to relieve them. It is possible, Dr. Moon said, that he took an overdose.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Wolf-Callers Are Hedging

THE BOY who cried wolf too often was finally right—but disregarded. So it may be with the prophets of recession. More and more businessmen and individuals are joining the ranks of unbelievers.

A large statistical service, which had been bearish, sent out fact and sentiment finders to Birmingham, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, St. Louis, Cleveland and other industrial centers. Came the report back: "Industrialists are feeling a bit more confident, are less worried about a recession."

Livingston

The stock market, which had been in the doldrums since its mid-May spill, suddenly discovered the elixir of life, spurted. "Best rally of the year," said the headlines. Apparently, investors and speculators, enticed by favorable price-earnings ratios and high dividends, are becoming less cautious.

Consumers Hopeful

And the man who calls the turn, the ultimate consumer, is anything but alarmed, according to the Federal Reserve Board's "Survey of Consumer Finances." For every nine householders who expected a fall-off in business last year, today there are only about five. Here's how consumers are voting on the business outlook:

	A Year Ago	Recently
Good times ahead	35%	55%
No change	23	21
Bad times	36	22
No answer	6	2

Ultimate consumers are not as bullish about their personal chances as about the chances for the Nation as a whole. But they're definitely not as uneasy as a year ago when 23 per cent expected lower incomes:

	A Year Ago	Recently
Income larger than preceding year	25%	26%
Same	34	42
Smaller	23	12
"It depends"	13	18
No answer	5	2

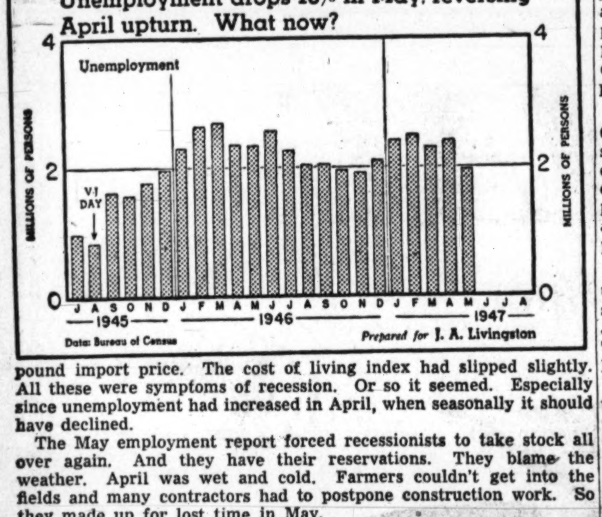
Economic surprise of the week was the Census report on unemployment—down 460,000 in May to 1,960,000 (chart). Employment rose to 58,330,000—an all-time high. Yet we're still a month away from the July seasonal peak, when harvesting calls for maximum farmhands.

Yes, It's Really So

The sharp drop in unemployment had Census takers all a-dither. They couldn't believe the data. They checked, double checked, yes, the figures were right, after all. Yet, production had turned down in April. Prices generally were showing signs of weakness—steel scrap was off from its high. Copper had edged down from the 24 cents a pound import price. The cost of living index had slipped slightly. All these were symptoms of recession. Or so it seemed. Especially since unemployment had increased in April, when seasonally it should have declined.

A STATISTICAL SURPRISE

Unemployment drops 19% in May, reversing April upturn. What now?



The May employment report forced recessionists to take stock all over again. And they have their reservations. They blame the weather. April was wet and cold. Farmers couldn't get into the fields and many contractors had to postpone construction work. So they made up for lost time in May.

Not only that, but trade and service employment increased. Hotels and summer resorts were taking on people a bit early, perhaps anticipating a booming trade. A good many persons entered business for themselves—"self-employed" the Census calls them—servicing refrigerators and electrical appliances, or selling neckties, stockings, and other items house to house.

However, factory employment was unchanged. Though durable goods industries took on workers, the nondurable goods let some go. And the 40-hour work week is back again—as against the average work week of 40.4 hours in March. Result: Overtime pay is down. The average weekly pay envelope has dropped moderately from $47.72 to $47.44. Biggest declines are in apparel, food, tobacco, and rubber. The tire industry is retrenching—having done half a year's production in three months. And price cutting—to boost sales—is taking place.

The May report on unemployment cannot be regarded as conclusive. The data covered the week of May 10. Since then, indications are that layoffs have increased. In the week ended May 24, for example, unemployment compensation claims rose from 1,140,000 to 1,179,000. Not only that, but department store sales, which had been running merrily about 12 per cent to 15 per cent above a year ago, didn't show up so well. The gain over a year ago was only 7 per cent.

Finally, ultimate consumers, though hopeful, are not expecting to buy as much this year as last. The aforementioned Survey of Consumer Finances showed that intentions to buy homes had decreased—partly because of higher prices. As for automobiles, the market seems as unsated as ever—notwithstanding the production of 3,700,000 passenger cars since VJ-Day. More people plan to buy more cars this year than last.

Thus, there are still two sides to this recession. And, all in all, it still seems worth while to give the economic wolf-callers (including this one) more time. They're still in good voice when it comes to explanations.

Investment Firm Share Values Drop $56 Million

Philadelphia, June 14 (AP).—Market value of security holdings of 144 management investment companies declined $56,189,000 during the first quarter of this year as compared to the $2,331,614,000 value at the end of 1946, the Securities and Exchange Commission said today in a quarterly survey of 63 open-end and 81 closed-end companies registered under the investment company act of 1940.

An open-end company permits security holders to redeem securities at cash surrender value at any time while the closed-end company is not obligated to buy back securities which it has sold.

The commission reported total assets of the companies declined from $2,710,0[illegible]0,000 in the last quarter of 194[illegible] to $2,703,879,000. The securities covered are exclusive of Government obligations and those of other investment companies.

English Journal Hits Argentine Linseed Price

London, June 14 (AP).—The Corn Trade News said in its weekly linseed review today "seemingly Argentina is at length beginning to see" that importing countries may refuse to pay exorbitant prices for linseed oil.

"The official Argentine export company," the review said, "was for some weeks asking 47.6 American cents a pound for Buenos Aires, but at that price buyers were reluctant to enter the market. Business was subsequently done with Sweden at 31.8 cents a pound.

"There comes a time when importing countries, no matter how urgently they may be in need of oil, refuse to pay exorbitant prices."

Stock Sale Authorized

Philadelphia, June 13 (AP).—Securities and Exchange Commission today approved an application of Consolidated Natural Gas Co. to sell 545,672 additional shares of its common stock in order to obtain funds to buy $30,230,700 worth of additional shares of common stock of four subsidiaries.

Will Vote on Stock Split

New York, June 14 (AP).—Directors of Remington Rand, Inc., have approved proposals to split the common stock two for one and will ask stockholders to vote on the proposal at the annual meeting July 29.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, June 14 (AP).—Corn led an upturn in feed grains on the Board of Trade today, jumping as much as 4 cents in response to a strong cash market and reports of widespread flood damage in Iowa.

While oats followed the advance in corn, lack of any sustained investment or speculative buying again caused wheat to slump. The bread cereal has declined each day this week on relatively moderate hedging pressure and has displayed only temporary and feeble rallying powers.

Wheat closed ⅛ to 1¾ lower, July 2.11½@2.11; corn was 1⅜ to 4 higher, July 1.89@1.89, and oats were ¾ to 1¾ higher, July 92⅞@93.

There were scattered showers over the Midwest, but the forecast for Sunday was mainly for clear weather. However, a large area of farm land in Iowa is either under water or will be shortly and the extent of damage to corn and oats is not known.

More important as a price making influence on corn was the strength of spot prices. No. 2 yellow corn sold as high as 2.14 a bushel, a premium of 27 cents over the July future at the time of sale. This is an extremely wide gap which must be narrowed before the end of July.

Lard was weak, ending 20 to 35 cents a hundred pounds lower, July 18.55. Part of the selling was attributed to packers.

The range follows:

	Open.	High.	Low.	Close.
Wheat—
July	2.12¼	2.13⅛	2.11	2.11½
September	2.10¼	2.11⅛	2.08¾	2.09½

Labor Union Audits Urged By Accountant

Auditing of accounts of labor unions was advocated last night by Edward B. Wilcox, president of the American Institute of Accountants at a banquet of the Middle Atlantic States Accounting Conference in the Mayflower Hotel.

Now that unions "are grown large and powerful, there is no more need to foster them . . . than there is need of tariff protection for our giants in industry," he said.

"On the other hand, the unions must have the information they need. Financial statements of employers designed primarily for investors and creditors do not provide this information. It must be furnished by financial statements designed especially for this purpose. This fact has been recognized by many corporate managements which have undertaken to keep labor informed by providing it with financial statements of company operation."

Mr. Wilcox also urged simplification of income tax laws, suggesting the appointment by Congress of a nonpartisan tax commission to establish a "consistent" policy.

The speaker also emphasized the important effect upon world economy which the policies of the United States may have. He expressed the hope that we would contribute to the reduction of trade barriers as a specific factor for world prosperity.

Nonfarm Realty Loans

Nonfarm realty loans of $20,000 or less in the District in April numbered 1478 and had an aggregate value of $9,283,000, the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration announced yesterday. The increase in dollar amount from March amounted to 9 per cent. The sources of the money and their percentages were: savings and loan associations, 41; insurance companies, 6; banks and trust companies, 16; individuals, 23; miscellaneous, 14.

Reliable Stores Dividend

Directors of Reliable Stores Corp., which operates furniture stores in Washington, have declared a regular quarterly dividend of 40 cents a share on capital stock, payable July 1 to stock of record June 25.

Failures Show Decrease

Commercial and industrial failures declined for the second consecutive week in the period ended June 5, totaling 66 compared with 72 in the preceding week, Dun & Bradstreet reported yesterday.

The week's total, however, was the largest for any Memorial Day week since 1942 and was five times the number in that 1946 period.

Failures involving liabilities of $5000 or more dropped from 63 in the preceding week to 46, while the group under $5000 increased sharply to 20, more than double the previous week's total.

Fisher Race Backed

H. Cochran Fisher, Washington agent of the Aetna Life Insurance Co., is a candidate for trustee of the National Association of Life Underwriters. His candidacy is supported by the District of Columbia Life Underwriters Association and also is indorsed by the Washington Chapter of American Society of Chartered Life Underwriters, the Washington Life Insurance General Agents and Managers Association and the District of Columbia Life Insurance Trust Council.

Fisher has been in the insurance business for 22 years with Aetna.

EAL to Cut Cargo Rates

Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, president of Eastern Air Lines, announced yesterday that the company will reduce air freight rates in this city and throughout its system as much as 27 per cent beginning August 1, in accordance with a new tariff to be filed with the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Examples illustrating the extent of reductions offered to shippers on a 50-pound shipment follows: From Washington to Boston, $2.28 as compared with old rate of $3.15; to Louisville, $2.78 compared to $3.78; to Houston, Tex., $6.38 compared to $8.78; to Atlanta, $3.03 compared to $4.14.

Personnel Notes

Mandell J. Ourisman of Washington was among 40 students recently graduated from the seventeenth session of the Chevrolet postgraduate school of modern merchandising in Detroit.

Arthur C. Doyle has been appointed sales manager of Colonial Airlines, Inc.

Ralph V. Davies, formerly sales manager of Aluminum Co. of America's Washington office, has been named a vice president of Alcoa.

Summer Rally Talk Pushes Stocks Ahead

New York, June 14 (AP).—Talk of a summer rally pervaded Wall Street this week and share prices in the stock market responded with their best average advance since the period ended February 1.

Historically the market is accustomed to an upswing from its mid-June levels. Bidding in anticipation of such a development provided a good lift to industrial and railroad issues.

The Associated Press 60-stock composite climbed 2.1 points above its status a week ago, breaking through the May peak in Friday's final session to end at 63.3. This was its best level since April 11.

It was the fourth successive week in which the average finished even or better than the end of the preceding period.

Demand for stocks was fairly well sustained in the face of uncertainty over prospects for presidential signature of the tax reduction bill, predictions that large sums would be required in the foreign lending program if American export business was to be maintained, and concern over some domestic labor situations.

Commission house analysts reported, however, that many conditions had been discounted, that the market had demonstrated its ability to withstand unfavorable news and that rising volume on upswings confirmed the existence of an oversold condition.

Aided by two sessions in which transfers topped a million shares, the week produced a total business of 4,560,400 shares compared with 3,209,250 in the preceding period.

Reflecting confidence that prospects for brokers' operations were improved, arrangements were made during the week for sale of three stock exchange seats, first at $54,000, then $58,000 and finally $60,000. The last-named figure is $10,000 above the amount paid in the last transaction of preceding weeks.

N. Y. Telephone Alters Plan on SEC Protest

New York, June 13 (AP).—The New York Telephone Co., whose application for permission to sell 125 million dollars of new 35-year debentures was disapproved "in its present form" by the New York Public Service Commission, announced today it would issue an equivalent amount of 35-year first mortgage bonds under its refunding mortgage.

Authority to sell the debentures was withheld by the commission on the grounds that the proposal "does not conform to the standards set up in numerous other cases."

Big Board Suspends Boston Allied Member

New York, June 13 (AP).—The board of governors of the New York Stock Exchange today announced the suspension for three months of Constantine Hutchins, an allied member.

Exchange spokesmen said the substance of the charge against Hutchins was that he violated a rule of the exchange by failing to place account names or designations on orders for certain accounts over which he had discretionary authority until after such orders were executed.

Hutchins is a member of the Boston firm of Hutchins & Parkinson. The suspension applies only to Hutchins, not to the firm.

Dollars for Indonesia

Singapore, June 14 (AP).—Isthmain Steamship Lines officials said today the ship James McCosh was en route from Cheribon, Java, to the United States with a $150,000 cargo which will give the new Indonesian Republic its first legal dollar exchange.

Eaton Pleads For Change In LaborPolicy

Chicago, June 14 (AP).—Cyrus Eaton, Cleveland industrialist and banker, said today that "to avoid extinction" capitalists will "have to make immediate and radical changes in our attitude toward labor and our methods of dealing with labor."

"We will have to begin by muzzling such organizations as the National Association of Manufacturers and by recognizing, and sincerely regretting, that there is bad feeling on both sides," he said.

In an article, "A Capitalist Looks at Labor," published in the current issue of the University of Chicago Law Review, he discussed labor legislation, saying:

"Let no businessman be naive enough to believe . . . that restrictive legislation will be any more effective in bringing about industrial harmony than the Volstead Act was in discouraging drinking."

Eaton, who has broad interests in the iron ore, steel, coal and railroad industries, asserted that "capitalism cannot survive without the support of labor." He added:

"The casualness with which we capitalists seem willing—nay, even eager—to invite the collapse of our economic system in almost every industrial dispute for the sole purpose of thwarting labor is utterly incomprehensible. Labor not only produces the goods and consumes a large part of them; labor also has the votes . . .

"Eventual (labor) unity is practically a foregone conclusion. The prospect of labor united should be sobering to even the most embittered and embattled capitalist.

"I also believe we may ultimately see a strong alliance between labor and the farmer, accompanied by a tremendous expansion of the manufacturing and selling cooperatives. The effecting of such a formidable combination awaits only the magic touch of some dynamic personality.

"Then, if capitalism has not already gone by the board, its continued existence will be completely at the mercy of an estranged 95 per cent of the electorate."

He credited John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers/Union, with exercising "wisdom and restraint" during the soft coal controversy last fall, and accused the mine owners of working "under cover . . . feverishly, night and day, to keep a torrent of abuse turned on the miners and their leaders, through every channel of publicity, and to urge all three branches of Government—executive, legislative, and judicial—to crack down on labor."

"Throughout the entire time," he added, "John L. Lewis never uttered a syllable of complaint and never issued a statement criticizing anybody."

Eaton said the Supreme Court decision against the miners "will be productive of untold evil in the whole field of labor relations."

In an article in the same publication, Senator Morse (R., Oreg.) said the American people were "expecting entirely too much of labor legislation as a panacea for industrial ills."

"I am afraid that too many, both in and out of Congress, have misled themselves into thinking that a maximum of industrial freedom in this country can be attained by putting American labor in a straight jacket," he added.

Cliffs Corp. Officials Confident of Merger

Cleveland, June 14 (AP).—Officials at Cliffs Corp. exuded confidence today that final sanction of the holding company's merger with Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co. would be ratified next week.

The assurance, following overwhelming approval of the consolidation by Cliffs Corp. stockholders yesterday, was expressed by Edward B. Greene, Cliffs Corp. president.

$25 Minimum Retail Wage Scale Begins

Underpaid working women and minors in District retail trades are guaranteed wage increases beginning tomorrow.

If they don't get them, their employers had better watch out for investigators of the District Minimum Wage and Industrial Safety Board.

The board's new minimum wage order for such employes goes into effect tomorrow, guaranteeing a $25 minimum weekly wage instead of the nine-year-old minimum of $17 for a 36- to 44-hour work week.

No figures were available as to the number of persons currently hired here at under the new minimum. But it could be called significant that at the board's public hearing on the proposed $25 minimum only one speaker disputed the new minimum. She asked for a $30 weekly minimum.

Retail trades, as defined by the board order, include those occupations in which employes sell or offer for sale at retail "any goods, wares, merchandise, articles or things," and employes include those whose services "are connected therewith."

A part-time rate of 65 cents an hour minimum is provided in the new regulations for employes working less than 36 hours weekly. Exception is granted for students under 18 years of age, who, when properly registered, are permitted to work up to nine months at a 55-cent-an-hour minimum.

Minimum overtime rate of 65 cents an hour is also mandatory in the trades for all hours worked over 44 hours weekly.

Tips are excluded in the employer's figurings of wages paid, and bonuses and commissions paid must be computed only in the week during which they are paid the employes, the order provides.

Special uniforms needed by employes in performance of their duties must either be provided or paid for by employers and their laundering is his expense up to a minimum of 50 cents a week for each uniform.

Ship Strike Looms Tonight

other unions failed to reach terms with the ship owners.

The deadlock between the NMU and the operators foreshadowed a strike of 200,000 CIO Maritime Workers that would paralyze shipping in every port of the nation. One of the unions involved is Harry Bridges' West Coast International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

Meanwhile the Maritime Firemen, Oilers and Watertenders Union (independent) signed a contract with the Pacific American Ship Owner's Association at San Francico, but other West Coast union-ship owners negotiations still were under way as the deadline nearest.

A meeting between the operators and the NMU recessed and was resumed today to 6 p. m. Ten minutes later, Joseph Curran, president of the union, stormed out and announced the breakdown in negotiations.

Curran charged the ship operators were "cocky because of the current status of the Taft-Hartley labor bill and had decided to lock out the NMU.

He hedged when asked whether there would be a direct strike call but said that "as matters stand now, as of June 15 there is no contract."

He said the union policy committee would meet Sunday morning to discuss the latest development.

The six major NMU demands were for a 20 per cent wage and overtime increase; a 40-hour week; extension of vacations; establishment of health and welfare funds; a review of manning scales, and a provision that all hiring be done through union hiring halls.

[Washington—Frederick R. Livingston, special assistant to Edgar Warren, chief of the United States Conciliation Service, was assigned to hurry to New York for settlement efforts, the Associated Press said.—Editor's note.]

St. Louis Officials Confer

St. Louis, June 14 (AP).—City officials conferred late today with company and union chieftans in an attempt to end a strike that has paralyzed public transportation in St. Louis since early yesterday.

Both the company and union notified Mayor Aloys P. Kaufmann at the start of the conference that they had nothing new to offer and were standing firm in their original positions in a wage arbitration dispute that led to the walkout.

Insurance Suspension Idles Most Va. Cabs

About 90 per cent of the taxicabs in nearby Virginia were idle yesterday as result of a State Corporation Commission order suspending the insurance of the Keystone Mutual Co.

While hundreds of rain-drenched commuters clamored for service in the Alexandria-Arlington-Fairfax area, the cabs were unable to operate legally because the commission's order left them without insurance coverage required under a State statute.

By last night, only one company—Arlington Yellow Cab Co.—had been able to transfer its insurance to another company in time to avert an interruption to business. The concern, which operates 20 cabs, reported "business as usual."

In Alexandria, the Yellow Cab Co. was operating only 6 of its 65 cabs, and the City Cab Co. reported only 4 of its 33 cabs in operation.

Black and White Cab, of Arlington, and the Falls Church Cab Co., which operate 10 and 16 cabs, respectively, reported their entire fleets idle.

Spokesmen for City Cab of Arlington, one of the largest companies in the county, declined to estimate the number of cabs affected by the commission ruling.

Because its rates are "considerably below" those charged by other companies, Keystone insures more than 95 per cent of the cabs operating in Virginia, it was pointed out.

Notification that the company's insurance was suspended came without warning in telegrams dispatched by the State Corporation Commission late Friday night to more than 700 Virginia companies insured by Keystone.

The order was issued after the commission charged Keystone with "apparent insolvency" and ordered its officers to appear at a hearing July 1 to show cause why its license to do business in Virginia should not be revoked.

Operators insured by Keystone were informed by the commission they should discontinue operations until "acceptable insurance" is filed.

The order came at a time when the cab companies were reaping a rich harvest in fares because of the eccentricity of the weather. Hundreds of calls were piling up at their switchboards, and countless commuters and shoppers were stranded throughout the nearby Virginia area or were forced to walk through rain-swept streets to nearest bus lines.

Under the State's insurance laws, cab operators who become involved in accidents and are unable to settle damage claims are subject to automatic revocation of their licenses.

Five Thinkers Chart Foreign Policy Reefs for Marshall

Picked Career Officers Work At His Elbow

By Ferdinand Kuhn, Jr.
Post Reporter

SOMETHING new has been added to the State Department since Secretary Marshall came home from Moscow.

It is something as new in its way, and as sensible, as the air-conditioned building on Virginia ave. where American diplomacy now has its headquarters.

It is a small policy planning staff with nothing to do but think, and plan, and dig up the facts on which an intelligent and consistent world-wide foreign policy can be based.

At its head is 43-year-old George Kennan, as able a career officer as the Foreign Service has produced in a generation. With him is a handful of seasoned officials who have been freed of all executive and administrative duties so they can devote their full time to the work.

First Big Job

MARSHALL formed this staff a month ago, when the outlines of an enormous foreign economic crisis were becoming visible. Its first major assignment has been to study the dollar crisis abroad: to discover why Europe has failed to recover from the war, why 17 billion dollars of American help since VJ-Day have been inadequate, how quickly large-scale help will be needed and how the emergency can best be met and mastered.

Secretary Marshall has announced that he will not try to answer any of these questions until he has the results of these studies.

The results will not come all at once in the shape of some monumental state paper. They will come gradually, step by step, and the Secretary will commit himself only as he knows that he has firm ground beneath every step.

He already has recognized Europe's great needs. At Harvard the other day he said those needs were greater and more urgent than anyone had foreseen.

His retiring Undersecretary, Dean Acheson, has said that the United States must import foreign goods on a vastly greater scale if the rest of the world is to recover. His trusted counselor, Benjamin V. Cohen, told a California audience last week that "those who have been studying Europe's rudimentary rehabilitation needs tell us that Europe, including Great Britain, may require as much as five or six billion dollars a year for another three or four years to meet those needs."

Work at His Elbow

ALL these are reflections of the studies and suggestions being made by Kennan's planners. The public cannot know how well the new group is functioning, but Marshall himself, an exacting taskmaster, has said he is pleased with the results so far.

It is symbolic of their high and unusual status inside the department that the new staff meets in a room next door to the Secretary's private office. No anteroom or corridor separates them. There is a connecting door.

There are no telephones in the room, no incoming and outgoing baskets of paper work and no individual desks. There is nothing in the room, in fact, but a long table with eight leather chairs. It is an efficient and uncluttered room.

It proves the Secretary's need of such a group, and the extent of his reliance upon it, that Kennan was chosen to head it. Normally a man of Kennan's talents would be sent as minister or even ambassador to some trouble spot abroad, or would be made director of one of the four all-important "geographic" offices within the department.

A Moscow Veteran

IN his 21 years' service he has been assigned to one difficult post after another. He has had three spells of duty in Moscow—the first with Ambassador William Bullitt in 1933, when diplomatic relations were reestablished with Russia, and the last as embassy counselor in Moscow at the peak of the war. He served in Nazi Germany from the very start of the war until Pearl Harbor.

Nobody in the Foreign Service knows more than he about the workings of the modern police state, or the equally baffling workings of the Soviet Russian mind. He is one of the comparatively few younger men in the service whose dispatches have a sense of history and a far-sighted sense of the future. He is credited with having foreseen the whole course of Soviet expansion in Europe and Asia since VE-Day, and with having written it in lucid and unprejudiced prose.

There is nothing hard and fast, and nothing exclusive, about the membership of his planning staff. Sometimes other officials, not regular members, are called in to sit at the table with Kennan and his group.

Roll Call of 'Regulars'

SO far, besides Kennan, there are four "regulars" in the group, as follows:

Joseph E. Johnson, a familiar figure at United Nations meetings, one of the State Department officials responsible for American policy in the Security Council;

Ware Adams, formerly on the staff of SHAEF as adviser on German affairs and later a political adviser on General Mark Clark's staff in Vienna; a veteran of seventeen years' service in the department;

Jacques J. Reinstein, an economist of fourteen years' experience in the Government, a former assistant chief of the Foreign Funds Control operation during the war, and recently an economic adviser to the Council of Foreign Ministers; and Carlton Savage, a trusted associate of Secretary Hull, a veteran of 20 years in the department, who serves as executive secretary of the Kennan group.

One more was added to the group last week when John P. Davies returned from his post as First Secretary of the Moscow Embassy. Davies, a Second Secretary in the Embassy at Chungking during the war, is possessor of one of the more imaginative and far-ranging minds in the career service.

Strictly Backstage

ALL of these planners will need the same "passion for anonymity" as the White House assistants in President Roosevelt's day.

The public will know little about their work and nothing about their individual contributions to State Department policy. They will have no responsibilities except to tackle the problems Secretary Marshall or the Undersecretaries toss at them.

The idea of policy planning is, of course, nothing new in the State Department or in other Government agencies. The halls of most Government departments are littered with the dust and scrap paper of policy planning groups that started with high resolves but soon found themselves waist-deep in trouble.

The war agencies had them in profusion. Secretary Marshall himself had an Operations Planning Division in the War Department; it had awesome status as a strategic planning staff, but its twin functions of operations and planning soon gave it an unholy reputation for interfering in the work of others.

Secretary Hull had a Committee on Postwar Programs which was largely responsible for formulating the Dumbarton Oaks program and, ultimately, the San Francisco Charter of the United Nations. This group had a full-time executive director in Leo Pasvolsky, now with the Brookings Institution, and it was able also to call upon unofficial members like the late Norman H. Davis, Dr. Isaiah Bowman of Johns Hopkins, and Myron Taylor, special envoy to the Vatican.

Most of its members, however, were harassed department officials themselves, so busy with "putting out fires" in day-to-day operations around the world that they were not able to give their full thought and energies to the long-term problems of fire prevention.

Most other policy planning groups came to grief either because they dabbled in day-to-day operations or because they functioned in the stratosphere without steady and recognized contact with the operating divisions.

Their Marching Orders

IN theory the Kennan group is an improvement over its predecessors in the State Department and elsewhere. Its assignment, as set forth in a departmental order on May 7, provides that it "will not issue directives, instructions, etc., to the operational organizations of the department or to missions in the field." It is supposed, however, to keep close contact with the various working divisions of the department and they, in turn, are supposed to keep the policy planners steadily informed.

Otherwise, the duties of the policy planners are to formulate long-term programs for carrying out the aims of American foreign policy; to anticipate problems the State Department may encounter around the world; to make studies and prepare reports "on broad politico-military problems" which the State Department may submit to interdepartmental bodies; and to see whether present American foreign policy is adequate in the light of new problems and developments abroad.

Kennan and his colleagues know perfectly well that their path is full of pitfalls.

The first is that they may be tempted or ordered to get down into the day-to-day

Heavy Support Marshaled for Measure

Federal School Aid Nearing Floor Action in Both Houses

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

LEGISLATION for Federal aid for the Nation's schools has a better chance of enactment at this Congress than in any previous year, many Capitol Hill observers believe.

Exhaustive hearings have been held in both houses. Already a Senate Public Welfare subcommittee has approved one measure by a vote of 6 to 1.

In the House, hearings have been completed by an Education subcommittee and the bill should move on to the House floor soon.

In the dozen years since the subject became prominent in Congress, it has won many converts. At the hearings this session many of the Nation's most prominent educators and friends of the American school system appeared to plead the cause of better education.

One of these, President James B. Conant of Harvard, posed the basic question to the House subcommittee when he asked:

"Why is Federal aid to education a necessity at this time?"

In answer to his own question, Dr. Conant proceeded:

"The answer is at bottom," he said, "because of the importance to this Nation. The schools need more money to do the work the Nation needs from them. In some areas the need cannot be met without Federal aid."

"To the extent that our schools are inadequate we fail to develop our greatest source of wealth, the youth of our country," he said.

"To the extent that they are successful we enrich the Nation every year with men and women of trained intelligence and well formed characters."

Percentages Deceptive

IN emphasizing the need of Federal aid, Dr. Conant provided the following comparisons:

"In 1944-45, 30 States spent for public schools from 1.5 to 2.8 per cent of the total income payments of their citizens. (This includes all income, from wages, dividends, etc.)

"Yet we find New Jersey, by expending 1.74 per cent of its people's income, provided $196 per child in school, while North Carolina, by expending 1.91 per cent, raised only $66 per child in school.

"Mississippi provided only $44 per child in school by using 1.64 per cent of its total income payments.

"While few would deny that almost every State should spend a greater per cent of its income for schools, it is clear that in not a few States even raising the figure to the average of the highest half dozen (2.38 per cent) would still leave a very low figure for the expenditure per child.

"Thus in North Carolina 2.38 per cent of total income payments in 1945 would have provided $86, and in Mississippi only $61 per child.

"Compare these figures with the $127 or more per pupil spent in 1944-45 by more than half the States."

Citizens of the World

DR. CONANT then took up and answered the following question:

"Why should the citizens of a relatively wealthy State be taxed to help the education in poorer States?"

His answer, which he called "obvious," was twofold:

"(1) All the youth of the country are future citizens of the entire country. Their activities as citizens and voters will determine the kind of Nation we are going to be living in in the next quarter of a century.

"Indeed," he said, "the education of all our future citizens may well determine the kind of world we are going to live in.

"Democracy is now on trial. Only a strong democracy can prove itself in this country. A democracy can only be strong if all the citizens are properly educated and careers are freely open to all the talented.

"(2) The population figures show we are a mobile people. There is a constant movement of inhabitants from one State to another. Particularly is this true as regards rural and urban areas.

"The future citizens of many of our wealthy States are now being educated in our poorer States. In terms of self-interest of these relatively prosperous communities, money is well spent in the education of their future residents."

Dr. Conant listed as his reason for favoring the McCowen bill in the House:

(1) The abstention from any degree Federal control over the States.

(2) The requirement that States provide education up to their reasonable capacity. For instance, each must put up an average of $40 a year per pupil to continue to receive national funds.

Each State must also provide this minimum expenditure for minority groups. The Federal money must be applied to schools for minority groups in proportion to the total population of the State.

AGNES MEYER

JAMES CONANT

The subject was approached from a different angle by another supporter of the McGowen measure before the House Committee, Mrs. Agnes E. Meyer, who appeared as a reporter on social problems for The Washington Post.

"Our Nation cannot develop by evolution rather than by revolution unless the great mass of uneducated Americans see the prospect of justice in the educational field," she said.

"Distress signals are flying over thousands upon thousands of our public schools, because of teacher shortage.

"In many areas schools are nonexistent or of very poor quality as to equipment and staff.

"Five million between the ages of 6 and 17 attend no school whatsoever.

"The crisis is acute and must be faced. It has more than national signficance. In the light of the ideological warfare that now divides the world into two camps, our educational situation has world-wide repercussions."

War-Born Psychology

MRS. MEYER spoke of the migration from substandard areas into the cities of the West, North and East.

"They are a terrible problem in every one of those communities," she reported. "These neglected millions are no longer indifferent to their fate.

"The war experience, whether in the Army or in industry, the semiskills which military life has given them, and their aimless war-wanderings from factory to factory have taught them how cruelly handicapped

Six Months on the Downgrade

Freedom of the Press Wanes As Many Nations Clamp Down

THE fight for freedom of information lost ground in many lands in the last six months through increased censorship and press regulations.

Some significant gains were registered, but a world survey by Assocated Press correspondents showed these were more than offset by the losses.

Danger signals were flying in China, the Middle East and Latin America. Press restrictions still were most severe, however, in countries under Russian domination.

An Unbalanced Ledger

ON the debit side:

1. A Mexican editor was killed for exposing state corruption.

2. The editor of an Argentine newspaper served five days in jail because of an article against several senators.

3. Restrictions were imposed in the interior of China for the first time in more than a year; many editors and reporters were arrested.

4. Nicaragua and Paraguay clamped down strict censorship and Guatemala promulgated a stringent decree.

5. Two newspapers were suspended in Lebanon.

On the credit side:

1. The United Nations Assembly unanimously approved a resolution stating that "freedom of information is a fundamental human right and is the touchstone of all the freedoms to which the United Nations is consecrated."

2. The United States Supreme Court ruled that judges may not use contempt proceedings to protect themselves from criticism.

3. The Russians relaxed censorship to pass dispatches on the Council for Foreign Ministers in Moscow. It was clamped down again when the conference ended.

4. Foreign correspondents generally were not hampered, although Bulgaria, France and Spain expelled certain newsmen.

Here is the situation in the last six months in rough outline:

Hungary: The ability of foreign correspondents to get their reports out of Hungary after the Communists took over was one of the surprises of the period. But their sources slowly dried up.

China: There is no censorship on dispatches of foreign correspondents. The domestic press is nominally free but various pressures are exerted by local authorities, especially in the interior.

Furor Over Killing

MEXICO: Vicente Villasana, editor of Tampico El Mundo, was shot and killed March 31 by the Tamaulipas State police inspector. That method of trying to influence newspapers was denounced throughout Mexico, the governor of the province was removed and President Aleman went on record again for freedom of the press.

Nicaragua: Total censorship became effective May 26 as Gen. Anastasio Somoza carried out his military coup d'etat. No mention of the censorship was permitted in any cable. Newspapers were told they could publish May 26 and 27 only with a censor in the office. All except Novedades, owned by Somoza, closed. They resumed publication May 28 but were careful not to criticize Somoza. Before the coup newspapers were free to say what they thought.

Paraguay: When the civil war began March 7, the almost nonexistent freedom of the press disappeared totally. Dispatches of foreign correspondents are heavily censored. No opposing newspapers are permitted to publish; the others print what they are told to.

Argentina: Foreign correspondents have complete freedom and the domestic press is not censored. However, President Peron showed his displeasure with the leading opposition paper, La Prensa. The newspaper held its ground, and in recent weeks the campaign against it has died down. The executive department was not responsible for the action of the Senate in jailing the editor of the pro-Peron Tribuna for his article accusing several senators of being enemies of Peron. The editor was pardoned by the Vice President after serving five days.

Spain: Francis McMahon, New York Post correspondent, was disqualified on charges of carrying on a "campaign of defamation" and sending "prejudicial" dispatches. The press card of Raymond Huber, bureau chief of Agence France Press, was withdrawn on a charge of sending "false and calumnious news."

Labor, Management's Stake in Taft Bill Is Buried in a Welter of Technicalities

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

CAN the Taft-Hartley bill be taken at its face value?

Will it accomplish its publicly stated aims, which are for the most part beyond challenge? Will it provide equality in bargaining between union and management? Will it stop jurisdictional strikes, paralyzing national emergencies, union coercion and irresponsibility, unfair union practices?

Or does it contain, in its 73 enormously complicated pages, provisions which will unwisely and unjustly weaken union strength? Will it hamstring the administration of the Wagner Act to the point where it becomes useless? Does it provide antilabor employers with all the ammunition they need to destroy unions?

Both types of allegations are made. The answer to the controversy, if there is an answer, will not come from broad, generalized statements, either of pious aims or frenzied name calling. It depends on a detailed analysis of some 40 or 50 major provisions in the new bill.

The objections to the bill do not center on its avowed aims, most of which are unimpeachable. They are directed, rather, to technical provisions in the measure on procedure and administration, and to complicated legal points affecting the operation of collective bargaining and the status of unions.

Below are summarized some, although by no means all, of the principal provisions which give rise to the controversy. Unfortunately, most of them are technical. But they are the heart and essence of the bill, whether for good or evil.

The arguments against the bill were culled from statements in Congress, by unions and officials of Government and private agencies. They are presented in the left-hand column. The replies to these criticisms were obtained in part from an interview with Gerard V. Reilly, former member of the National Labor Relations Board and special counsel to the Senate Labor Committee, and in part from official statements of Senate and House conference managers. They appear in the right-hand column.

OUTLAW STRIKES AND INJUNCTIONS

1. Secondary Boycotts—All forms of secondary boycotts are made illegal. These are strikes, or refusals to handle goods, by workers who seek to make an employer, not their own, recognize a union or grant some other concession. In other words, workers cannot strike against Employer A to force a concession from Employer B, who deals with Employer A.

* * * *

Under this provision, unions could no longer refuse to handle "scab" products or those made under sweatshop conditions. The Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia Acts, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, hold that it is lawful for workers to refuse to handle goods, if the purpose of their boycott is to force the maker of those goods pay better wages, bargain with their union, etc.

This provision would upset that principle. There could be no boycott, however "legitimate" were the primary aims of the boycotting union. The provision restores the doctrine of the famous Bedford Cut Stone and Duplex cases, which the Norris-LaGuardia Act corrected. In the Duplex case, with Holmes and Brandeis dissenting, the Supreme Court held that machinists, their union threatened by the low wages in one nonunion printing machinery plant, were breaking the law when they refused to install that machinery after it was sold.

The provision also renders unions which conduct a boycott subject to damage suits from anyone who was injured by it. It may, indeed, make the union subject to triple damages under the Sherman Antitrust Act, contrary to the professed intent of the Clayton Act, which was to exempt unions from just such suits.

Under the Wagner Act, an employer has no option, in the matter of recognizing and bargaining with a union, but to accept the choice of his own employes. This has resulted in the paradox of an employer, who has complied with the law, seeing his markets shut off by unions which have failed to organize his plant.

For example, suppose that employes of Manufacturer A vote against Union X. Members of that union, who are employed by Contractor B, who handles Manufacturer A's products, refuse to install them. To retain his market, Manufacturer A must recognize Union X, contrary to his own employes' wishes and therefore contrary to the law.

It may be noted that State labor laws exempt an employer from anti-injunction laws when, if the employer were unable to get an injunction against a boycott, he would be forced to recognize the boycotting union in violation of his employes' wishes and hence in violation of the State labor law.

2. "Featherbedding." It is an unfair labor practice for unions to force, or attempt to force, an employer to pay any money, "in the nature of an exaction," for services which are not performed.

* * * *

The provision attempts only to stop practices such as those of the musicians' union, which exacts wages for "standby" musicians who do not work. But it is so drafted that it might prohibit unions from even asking for contract clauses providing such things as the employment of safety inspectors, rest periods, vacation time and a guaranteed minimum number of hours' pay per week, regardless of whether the time was worked.

Senator Taft (R., Ohio) told the Senate that the bill has no such intent, and that the contract provisions above would not be "exactions." Nevertheless, this section may well be used to hinder unions from blocking a "speedup."

For example, suppose an employer proposes to have a job done by a crew of eight men, which customarily had been done by ten. He may claim that the extra two do not "perform services." Union efforts to retain them may thus be considered as attempts to exact pay for work not performed.

In general, the effect of the provision seems to be to saddle on the workers the economic hazards of industries with intermittent type operations.

Senator Taft's statement that the section is not intended to prevent a union from seeking legitimate contract provisions for the purposes mentioned in the opposite column is a part of the bill's legislative history. The construction he placed on the intent of the provision is binding on the NLRB and the courts. It would be absurd to place a contrary construction on it to prevent legitimate union practices.

The purpose and only effect of the provision, in the light of its legislative history, is to prevent an employer from being forced to pay money to a union—in order to keep labor peace—to compensate men whom he has refused to employ because they were in excess of his needs.

3. Cooling Off Periods. It is an unfair labor practice to strike within a period of 60 days before the expiration of a collective bargaining contract.

* * * *

During this period the employer could, with relative impunity, indulge in provocative antiunion activity, for the union's hands are tied. The penalty against an employer for such provocation would be only a cease and desist order from the NLRB. But if the union struck it could be enjoined, and the strikers would lose their status under the law—a much more severe punishment.

If an employer does attempt such provocation, he could not, under the "clean hands" doctrine, obtain an injunction against his workers' striking. He himself, meantime, would be liable to penalties for committing an unfair labor practice.

4. Injunctions. The NLRB may seek from a Federal court an injunction against any person committing an unfair labor practice. It is required to seek an injunction when it finds workers engaged in a secondary boycott, or strikes to force union recognition contrary to, or in the absence of, an NLRB certification. It is also required in some cases to seek an injunction against jurisdictional strikes.

* * * *

It is not true in any real sense to say that the Taft-Hartley bill rejects a House-sponsored (and Senate-defeated) proposal to give private employers the right to seek injunctions against these types of strikes. For the section forces the NLRB, whether or not it feels this is the right way to settle the dispute, to apply for an injunction once a showing is made that such a strike, or a strike campaign, exists.

In seeking an injunction, the NLRB would not be acting in the traditional sense of an "impartial Government agency," for it would have no discretion in the matter.

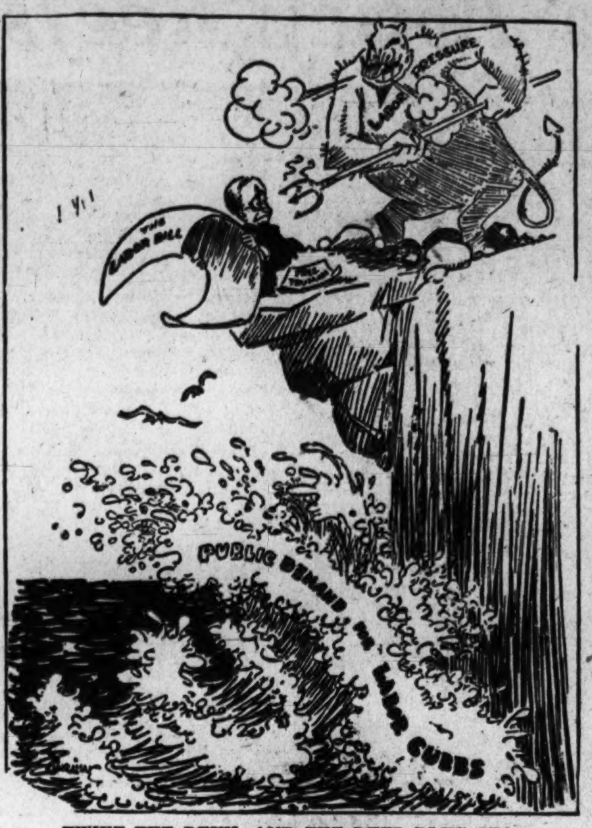
The effect is that the private employer would be more liable to get the injunction he desires, when a branch of the Government asks for it, than if he were allowed to apply for it himself.

Because of the enormous benefit which an injunction gives employers, many will be likely to charge that every strike against them involves a secondary boycott angle. They need only show that "an object"—not necessarily the principal one—of a strike is to apply a boycott. If they can make such a showing, the NLRB is obliged to seek an injunction.

The bill does prevent a private employer from going into court and making a one-sided complaint, claiming that he is the victim of a boycott or jurisdictional dispute or other illegal strike, and thereby obtaining an injunction.

A regional officer of the NLRB must first investigate both sides of the case. He is directed to apply for an injunction only when he is convinced that a real dispute of this nature exists.

Since the employer would know from the union what demands he must grant to get his men back to work, and since the NLRB could check on the demands, there would be no mystery on what all the objectives of the strike were. An employer could not make a phoney charge, to the effect that he was confronted with an illegal strike, hold water.



TWIXT THE DEVIL AND THE DEEP BLUE SEA
. . . From the Des Moines Register and Tribune

5. "National Emergency" Strikes—If a dispute threatens to cause a strike in an entire industry, or substantial part of it, which would endanger the national health and safety, the Attorney General can obtain an injunction against it to be in force for 80 days.

* * * *

Under this provision, the court might well break a strike and its orders could certainly weaken the union involved. But unlike the plant seizure provision of the Smith-Connally Act, there are no corresponding penalties or losses on the companies involved.

The effect of the provision might well be to encourage stubbornness by employers in big disputes. If they refuse to make concessions to the union, they can count on having the Government weaken the union, if not, in fact, break a threatened strike.

There were no penalties or losses to the employer under the Smith-Connally Act, because the Government operated the seized plants for the interests of its owners, and turned over the profits to them.

UNION SECURITY

6. Union Shop Elections—Before workers can obtain a union shop contract with their employer, the union shop must be favored in a secret ballot by a majority of all employes eligible to vote. (A union shop contract requires a worker to become a union member, as a condition of holding his job, within 30 days or more after he is employed.)

The requirement that the vote must be a majority of all eligible employes makes the union shop much harder to obtain. Hitherto, in almost all types of elections and plebiscites, the principle has been that the issue shall be decided by a majority of all persons who voted, not of all who were eligible to vote.

In the best of circumstances, in all elections, a great number of eligible voters do not cast a ballot. By the new requirement, each person who abstains from voting is automatically and actually voting against the union shop.

An election under NLRB auspices, unlike a public election, is held on the premises of the plant and during working hours. Under such circumstances, 90 per cent of the employes vote. Therefore this provision does not impose an undue burden on the union. (In 1946, 83 per cent of eligible workers cast valid votes in NLRB elections.—Editor's note).

7. Discharges in a Union Shop—Even though there is a union shop contract, the employer is not required to discharge a worker whom the union has ousted from membership or refused to admit, unless the grounds were that the worker did not pay his dues.

* * * *

The provision weakens, if not destroys, the main purpose of a union shop, which is to give a union security of status. For if a worker is expelled from a union because of disruptive tactics, dishonesty, improper conduct, Communist Party membership, or even because he was discovered to be a company spy, he may still be retained in his job, free to continue his objectionable and trouble-making activities.

The union's power to discipline its members, and throw out those who breed trouble between it and the employer, is critically undermined.

The provision has the effect of reducing a union shop agreement to nothing more than a dues-collecting device. It would yield the union no more benefits than could be obtained from an agreement for the company to check off union dues from the wages of all employes.

It is not desirable to give a union disciplinary powers which may cost a worker his job. Though in some instances workers are expelled from unions for legitimate and proper reasons, evidence before the congressional labor committees, indicated that unions were abusing the union shop procedure. They ousted workers who belonged to insurgent factions; Communist leaders expelled the most vigorous and effective anti-Communists, etc.

A famous case is that in which a union ousted from membership a worker who refused to perjure himself by testifying in the union's behalf, in a court case. Unless there were the protection of this provision, a worker so expelled from a union would also lose his job in a union shop plant.

8. Priority of State Laws. Despite permission in the bill for the union shop, State laws which forbid this and other forms of union security shall supersede the Federal law in their jurisdictions.

* * * *

Eleven States have enacted laws prohibiting the union shop. Bills to this effect are pending in the Legislatures of nine more. These laws are inconsistent with the present Wagner Act but their validity has not yet been decided in the Supreme Court.

Under the bill, these State laws would be recognized and made valid, thus diluting the effect of the permission in the Federal law by from one fourth to one third, and even more in the future.

It is notable that the bill provides that in all respects it shall supersede conflicting provisions in State laws. But in this one instance there is an exception: more restrictive provisions relating to the union shop in State laws shall override the Federal law.

The provision does no more than continue the legislative history of the Wagner Act. The congressional committees which reported out the original law in 1935 expressly stated that it tolerated compulsory membership agreements only to the extent that they were legal under State laws.

Economizers

Pruning's Routine at 'Budget'

By Clarke Beach

THE CONGRESSIONAL economy campaign is a periodic affair, but in the Budget Bureau, next door to the White House, economizing is a full-time job.

The bureau doesn't save billions, as Congress hopes to do, but month after month it shows Government agencies how to save thousands or millions.

Congress created the bureau in 1921. In 1939 it became a part of the Executive Office.

Today one unit of the bureau, the division of administrative management, operates as the Government's "efficiency experts." The head of the division, Donald C. Stone, for years has been the President's expert on setting up new agencies and keeping the old ones up to date. In the war years, when the President summoned big business executives to run war agencies, the men were told to look up Don Stone first thing.

Tall, lean, grinning Stone would guide the tenderfoot through the jungle of Washington officialdom, show him how to get an office building and a staff and lend him a man or two to help organize his outfit.

His division helped the War Department and the Army Air Forces put together their vast wartime organizations. It planned for reconversion and the contraction of Government agencies when the war over.

Payrolls Simplified

NOW it is using the latest devices of management engineers to run the peacetime agencies as cheaply and effectively as possible. With the help of the General Accounting Office and the Treasury, the bureau recently worked over the Government pay procedure from top to bottom and eliminated 40 per cent of the steps in preparing pay checks.

DONALD C. STONE
. . . "Jungle" guide

There used to be 2000 types of Government "leave records." With the help of the Civil Service Commission, the bureau reduced them to two. A standard form for use in appointing and separating employes saves $100,000 annually in printing alone.

In the Railway Mail Service the bureau found that every new employe had to sign three forms—an oath of office, a personnel affidavit and a no-strike affidavit. The bureau put all three on one form which could be signed by 100 persons—thus using one form where 300 had been used.

The Patent Office receives 80,000 to 100,000 requests a week for copies. It used to take 8 to 12 weeks to deliver, and the office had a backlog of 500,000 requests. The bureau introduced mail order procedure and reply time was reduced to three or four days, cost was almost halved and the office was able to make a substantial cut in personnel.

Channeled Effort

A YEAR ago the Wage-Hour Division was having great difficulty making all necessary factory inspections with its limited staff. The bureau found so few violations were detected in some factories that more effective work could be done by concentrating on others.

A while ago there was a great shortage of filing cabinets. The bureau checked on the vast acreage of cabinets in the General Land Office and learned that some were used so seldom that the material could be stored in the Archives. Seven hundred cabinets were made available to other agencies, saving the Government $20,000 and 4000 square feet of floor space.

Harry H. Fite, of the management improvement branch, recalled how some Land Office employes hated to part with the cabinets. They were sure that someday they would need the material in them.

"Government people go to unbelievable lengths to avoid errors," he said. "The trouble is that when you make a bad mistake in the Government service, you not only get fired. You might also be tried.

"But to be efficient you have to take a calculated risk. That's one of the things we try to teach them."

Great Salt Lake

Tourists visiting Great Salt Lake on American Express Yellowstone Park tours this summer will learn that Great Salt Lake is only from 20 to 50 feet deep, with salt content varying from 15 to 28 per cent. But at all stages the salt content is so dense that it buoys the human body above the surface, and at points gives the optical illusion of people swimming in the air rather than in the lake.

The 'Do-Nothing' Congress—Did!

By Robert C. Albright

THE record the Republican Congress will carry to the country is almost complete.

Nearly a third of it is enacted. Roughly another is at the White House or on the way. The rest is far enough along to make a guess.

What the record shows is this: After dodging brickbats for five months, the misnamed "do nothing" Congress has delivered. Except for unredeemed budget pledges, it has delivered nearly all it promised. Republicans, the country over, cried for action. They got it.

A load of legislation that would stall a bulldozer has been coaxed, sweated and hand-lifted over the hump.

Most of it was shoved through a needle's eye Senate and a sometimes balky House by the sheer force of Republican Party discipline.

Foreign affairs was the shining exception. The nonpartisan understanding on foreign policy wore thin, but Mr. Truman got what he asked.

In contrast, nearly all of the domestic measures were wired for campaign sound. On top of the heap, tax reduction and labor bills are still charged with enough dynamite to blow either party sky high. There's a land mine, too, under rent controls and nearly every appropriation slash.

When the fused bundles explode (with or without a veto) you'd better duck. It's anybody's guess who they'll hit politically.

Here's the load:

DELIVERED

BAN on portal to portal pay suits. Signed by H. T.

Constitutional amendment limiting Presidents to two terms. Awaiting ratification by three-fourths of the States.

Extension of sugar controls. Signed by H. T.

Four hundred million to aid Greece and Turkey combat communism. Signed by H. T.

Another 350 million in famine relief for liberated areas. Signed by H. T.

Balkan treaties. Ratified by Senate.

Four billion worth of tax reduction. Veto indicated.

Labor bill union curbs. Veto indicated.

ON THE WAY

MODIFIED extension of rent controls. Conferees agreed.

Permissive increases in import fees on foreign wool. Conferees agreed.

International Refugee Organization. Approved by Senate. Favorably reported to House.

Army-Navy unification. Reported to Senate.

Presidential succession bill, making House Speaker Joe Martin Mr. Truman's heir. Reported to Senate.

National Science Foundation. Passed Senate.

Waft-Taft-Ellender housing bill. Reported to Senate.

New Department of Health, Education and Security. Reported to Senate.

Federal aid to education. Approved by Senate Public Welfare Subcommittee.

SNAGGED

EVERY House-whittled 1948 appropriation bill.

APPARENTLY LOST

HOUSE pledge to cut budget six billion dollars.

Senate pledge to cut it 4½ billion.

Universal military training.

* * * *

THAT'S the score within two months of session's end. Except for itemized axing of appropriations, to be quarreled out in conference it's the record Republicans will stand on.

It helps explain why the 1948 campaign is already booming a full 12 months ahead of the book.

Oversight

A RECENT White House visitor was chatting with the President on the state of the Nation's finances.

Truman's guest put up some stiff arguments against vetoing the four-billion-dollar tax reduction bill.

The President grinned broadly and noted that one argument had been omitted.

With mock hopefulness, the President supplied it.

"It might defeat me for reelection," he said.

Dealing Out Crump

ED CRUMP of Memphis, last of the Democratic big city bosses, is losing his State-wide grip.

Crump still rules Memphis with undisputed sway. It's his working arrangement with East Tennessee Republicans that's crumbling. It was through that arrangement that he sent his own men to the Senate and into the Governor's chair.

The deal was this: East Tennessee Republicans were free to handpick GOP members of the election boards. Crump offered no opposition in the contests for county offices. In return, Republicans could vote in the Democratic primaries for Crump's State-wide entries.

What's happening to Crump is tied to what's happening to Republican National Chairman Carroll Reece in East Tennessee. While Congressman from Tennessee's First District, Reece called the Republican turns in that section of the State. As Republican National Committeeman from Tennessee, he still might do so.

But here's what happened when Reece left Congress:

The man Reece backed to suceed him in the House was defeated by another Republican—37-year-old World War II Veteran Dayton E. Phillips. Representative Phillips is certainly not indebted to Reece and is extremely unlikely to back-scratch with Crump.

Even less likely to support the Crump working arrangement is Tennessee's other Republican Congressman—Representative John Jennings, jr., of Tennessee's Second District.

Recently Jennings clashed bitterly with Crump's ally, Senator Kenneth McKellar, when the Tennessee Republican supported Gordon R. Clapp for TVA chairman.

The showdown on who really runs the GOP in East Tennessee will come at the next Republican State convention. If Jennings climbs into the saddle, it will be a bad day for both Crump and McKellar.

No Wallace Scapegoat

CONGESSIONAL Democrats, just recovering from a licking in Washington State's Third District, are about to take another in Pennsylvania's Eighth.

Trying for a Keystone comeback in the home district of the late Representative Charles L. Gerlach (R., Pa.), they bumped into this bad news.

Gerlach's district is also the home preserve of Joe Grundy, Pennsylvania's veteran GOP political boss. Grundy got there first and entered a strong candidate in Franklin H. Lichtenwalter, speaker of the State House.

Democrats put up Philip Storch, Allentown newspaperman. They're making only a token fight. The election's in September.

* * * *

Rationalization

THE House cloakroom brigade is still refighting the Washington State campaign, in reverse. Republicans are vying with Democrats in disowning their candidates.

In one hair down session, Democratic regulars confessed they are just as happy as if they'd won. They fear above all else a 1949 campaign split. Election of leftwinger Charles Savage, they say, would have added fat to the Wallace fire.

Not to be outdone, Republican conservatives insist they are just as unhappy as if they'd lost, because: To win, Republican Candidate Russell V. Mack had to (1) support the Truman Doctrine, (2) denounce GOP cuts in reclamation projects and, (3) the unkindest cut, take a sock at the GOP tax bill.

. . . But Kansas City Wasn't Mere Bad Luck

Fates Gang Up on Truman Again

By J. R. Wiggins

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S popularity curve, by every indication, is about to set another record for fluctuation.

The chilly regions around or below the favor of 50 per cent of the people seem likely to be its next stop. It was at a March high of 60 and the most recent Gallup Poll put it at 57 in May. It will rank with such indestructible phenomena as the roof of Josh Billings' barn if it stays up in spite of the high winds of political adversity that have been blowing this month. That celebrated structure, it will be remembered, was hit by a storm so fierce that it blew down the walls and left only the roof standing.

The Kansas City vote frauds are a real misfortune for the President and a serious threat to his standing. The country has been charitably inclined to forget about the Pendergast machine and the Jackson County gang out of which Mr. Truman rose to political eminence, just as it forgot the political machines of other Presidents.

There is this difference. Other Presidents took care to make clear that their machine politics were things of the past. President Wilson dealt with the Smith machine of New Jersey in a way that left no doubts on this score. Mr. Truman risked his reputation for political purity by evidences of his devotion to the late Boss Pendergast, but the doubts this raised were matched by a sort of admiration for loyalty grown inconvenient. The new frauds in Jackson County are not of the past; and the bosses involved are not dead bosses, but very live ones who are not only crooked but clumsy as well.

Too Many Tieups

THE unfolding tale of how this machine defeated Representative Slaughter for the Democratic nomination in the President's district reflects no credit on the White House. The President asked and received the help of an organization whose methods must have been known to him. He cooperated with it in achieving Slaughter's defeat.

Then his own Attorney General proceeded rather feebly to investigate the first charges of graft. And when the Senate threatened to intervene, the ballot evidence was stolen at a time the President was in Missouri.

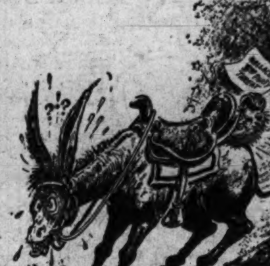
Even the President's enemies would not imply that the ballots were stolen with his knowledge; but even his friends cannot deny that the President invited some rather dubious support in his fight against Slaughter.

The Wallace Bogey

HENRY WALLACE, in the first few weeks of June, has turned into a much more serious threat to President Truman than party leaders counted on. He has done a lot of damage to the President, whatever his political course in 1948. How much damage will depend some on whether Wallace finally supports Truman, supports a Republican, starts a third party or grouses. In any case, it is going to hurt the Democratic Party.

How it will hurt has been demonstrated in the State of Washington, where Russell Mack, Republican, defeated the Wallace Democrat, Charles Savage, in a special congressional election. It also is being demonstrated in California, where the Los Angles County Democratic Committee has censured the President because members of his Administration "boycotted" a Jackson Day dinner addressed by Mrs. Roosevelt.

Henry Wallace has not created the divisions in the Democratic Party but he has made it more difficult to overcome them. He has made it harder to continue the precarious alliance of divisive right and left wing factions. And he has made it more of a problem for the President to keep for his new foreign policy, with its acknowledged risks, the united support that upheld the White House when hopes for real international cooperation were brighter.



THE BURR UNDER THE '48 SADDLE

. . From the Los Angeles Times

A Miscast Hamlet

CIRCUMSTANCES created some of the Truman reverses, but the Taft episode and its repercussions are the President's very own handiwork. Good will is the best buy on the Truman racks and Hannegan and the boys were getting ready to sell the country a 1948 model of the Monroe "Era of Good Feeling." The President is a natural for the role. He exudes a folksy sort of friendliness. He is not vindictive. He is informal and unpretentious. He is well cast in such a play.

Then he stepped out of character. He picked up a remark attributed to Taft in an informal interview to the effect that exports to Europe are raising domestic prices. He dignified it by calling it a public statement. He attacked it with great vigor and bitterness. In doing this he not only abandoned his best political role; he dragged Taft into a dispute on foreign policy the discussion of which, from the point of view of national interest, might better be left to Senator Vandenberg.

He also reopened the price level debate in a way certain to provoke rejoinder. The rejoinder came quickly enough. The "era of good will" has evaporated and the 1948 campaign is on.

New tests of the Truman popularity are sure to follow his action on the labor and tax bills, whatever that action is.

Unfortunate Timing

THERE have been other bad breaks. It was a piece of ill luck to have Dictator Somoza seize power in Nicaragua on the very day the President announced a hemispheric arms program that might put into the hands of Somozas throughout South America the means of asserting and maintaining similar regimes. The Nicaragua coup dramatized this foremost objection to the arms program.

It was also a rather unhappy thing to have the resignation of Spruille Bladen and the reestablishment of cordial relations with Argentina followed by new evidences of the close liaison between the fascist dictatorship of Spain and the Peron regime nd surmounted by allegations at Peron has been arming a volution in Paraguay.

The Red coup in Hungary rther buffeted the President's reign policy, and although his ass popularity may not suffer eedily, the President's standg with a great many of his forign advisers was not increased y impulsive and premature declarations, which the Government has not the means to implement.

There have been some rare June days of Truman gain, too. They must be set against the preponderantly bad days. The President's vigil at his mother's bedside fixed more firmly than ever in the public mind the portrait of a man who still, in high places, retains the qualities of devotion that every mother would like to find in a son. The Canadian visit was another felicitous occasion when President Truman was at his best. The "good neighbor" policy never had an emissary more appropriate. There was still another ingratiating glimpse of the President with the "Boys of Battery B."

On balance, though it has not been a good period for "Truman Popularity Common." If the next Gallup poll takes a downward dive, check back on the first 10 days of June and you will find some explanations.

Class Finds Pulps Akin to Classics

Meadville, Pa. (AP).—To test a student's argument that the pulps and classics have a lot in common, Prof. Fred W. Householder assigned the 10-cent fiction magazines as required reading for a recent meeting of the "Great Books" class.

The students found that "superscience" pulps have a kinship with the magic element in some Greek epics and that dime romances owe a debt to the ancient tales of love, but noted few other similarities.

Childish Racial Bias Melts at Unique Camp

By Fred Hechinger

A BUSLOAD of anxious parents arrived at a camp in upper New York State one day last July. A 6-year-old boy dashed up. "Daddy," he yelled, "we are building a better world!"

Little Tommy had just completed his first three weeks at Camp Willowemoc in the Catskills, and the camp had turned out to be 115 beautiful acres of "one world." It is an interesting interracial, interfaith, coeducational camp for children from 5 to 15. About half of the campers, counselors, directors and help are white, the other half Negro.

Campers and staff last year included 11 faiths, came from 20 cities of the East, Midwest and South. They were of every national stock: Irish, Canadian, Hungarian, Scottish, Puerto Rican, English, Spanish, Russian, German, Italian, Austrian. But if anyone asked, the answer was: "We are all Americans. None better, none worse."

This unique camp is the work of Dr. Thomas W. Patrick, jr., a Harlem pediatrician. His story is that of the camp.

"The camp might never have been started," he says, "if I hadn't gone to Germany. But let me start at the beginning."

'Exiled' to Germany

HARVARD-GRADUATED in 1929, he was ready for his medical training. America, however, was not ready for him. "We regret . . .," one medical school after another wrote. Patrick's skin was of the wrong color. He was accepted by the University of Berlin.

That was in 1930. Student Patrick was a bit of a paradox: a temporary refugee from democracy. Five years later he returned as a qualified physician.

But in Germany Patrick had seen sadly significant events. "I had always wanted to fight for the Negro," he says. "But when I saw what the Germans were doing to the Jews I realized that the fight must be for the rights of all men and all races."

Out of this, some sleepless nights, Dr. Patrick's bottom dollar and some generous loans grew Camp Willowemoc. Patrick bought the grounds of a vacant three-story hotel. It's now the clubhouse and home for the younger children. The older ones sleep in wood-floored tents.

Then Dr. Patrick accomplished what well-meaning critics had believed impossible—he assembled an interracial staff. He was afraid the nearby town might object. But when in July, 1944, the first 120 kids arrived, the people of Roscoe, N. Y., gave them a hearty welcome.

Trades people came across with special rates for the camp. The farm next door opened its meadows and let the city kids have a look at country life.

During the first days of the camp session some prejudices come to the surface. It then becomes a problem of teaching through living.

"Eeny, meeny, miny mo—catch a nigger by the toe," one girl in a group of 7-year-olds was "counting out." Worried little eyes turned to Dr. Patrick nearby. He said nothing. A white girl protested: "That's not nice. Mummy taught me to say 'catch a Negro by the toe.'" But that wouldn't do, either, another youngster objected; it was still hurting a human being. Finally they settled for a monkey.

At a first mealtime another question arose. Some children wanted to say grace, others didn't. Dr. Patrick proposed that those who had been taught to do so pray silently; the rest volunteered to be quiet. After that, there was no need to preach "freedom of religion."

"You see, we don't lecture on tolerance," says the doctor. "Instead we practice equality."

Drawing the Line

PARENTS are not easily sold on the interracial idea. Some prejudices are too deep-seated to give way to intellectual liberalism. "I think that's wonderful," said one mother on the phone. "Catholics, Protestants and Jews should learn to live together." The doctor remarked that there would also be Negro children. A moment's silence. Then: "Goodness! I couldn't think of sending my child there."

Other parents come to Dr. Patrick with severe doubts, but register their youngsters with him before they leave. His winning personality may be a factor. But there is more. Dr. Patrick's belief in true democracy is a "salestalk" in itself.

But he is not satisfied with the camp. He wants better facilities. At present, the $225 tuition for two months just about covers day-to-day needs. The remainder has been coming largely from Dr. Patrick's personal funds.

Now a group of prominent New Yorkers, including Authors Margaret Halsey, Lilian Smith and Fannie Hurst, Editor Clara Littledale, the Rev. John Haynes Holmes, Anthropologist Margaret Mead and Playwright-politician Clare Boothe Luce has formed the Willowemoc Foundation to collect contributions for the work.

Frank Hague's Still Around, However

Jersey City Weeps for a Despot

By Charles F. Kiley

JERSEY CITY, June 14.—One of the last of the powerful city bosses stepped down when Frank Hague announced his resignation as Mayor of Jersey City, effective Tuesday, after 30 years. In those three decades he has ruled Jersey City absolutely, influenced the State government periodically and swayed the National Government occasionally.

The tall, bald, impeccably dressed politician gave his age—71—as the reason for his resignation. It was not entirely unexpected by Hague's subjects, but there had been no indication that he would quit in the middle of a term, his eighth as mayor since he was first elected in 1917.

Hague's critics had an explanation. He had seen the handwriting on the wall, said former Gov. Charles Edison, a bitter foe. He referred to the downfall of Bernard N. McFeely, an old Hague sidekick who lost the mayoralty election in neighboring Hoboken last month for the first time in 25 years. Edison also had in mind the Republican landslide in New Jersey last November.

Frank Hague simply laughed. Finished? Well, he wouldn't be around city hall as much, but he was holding his posts as State Democratic leader and as vice chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

He'll be stopping in at city hall once in a while to "check up on things," Hague said after designating his 46-year-old nephew, Frank Hague Eggers, to serve the two-year unexpired term as mayor.

So the Hague machine will continue to function. The city commission, the ward leaders, the city jobholders, the Hague-designated members of Congress will be operating as of old—carrying out the boss' program. But Hague will be able to take his annual Florida vacation without his critics shouting that he ought to be at city hall instead of Hialeah.

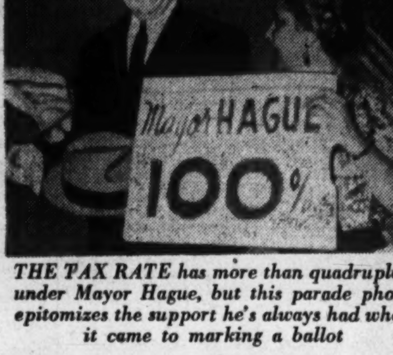
Merely Circumscribed

IF THERE is a weakening of Hague's power in Jersey City, it is not apparent. His hold on the State vote has diminished, but that's nothing new. An anti-Hague Democratic Governor, Edison, and two Republican Governors, Walter E. Edge and Alfred E. Driscoll, have controlled the State Legislature in Trenton since 1940. But they have not been able to dent his armor appreciably in Hudson County, and certainly not in Jersey City.

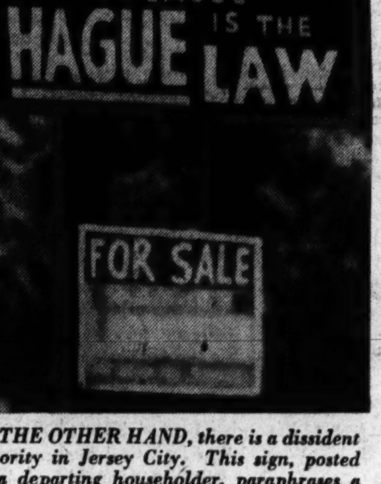
Frank Hague, who never took a drink in his life, gave up cigars 30 years ago, and finally forswore even coffee and tea, would be the last person to deny that he has ruled his city with an iron hand. On occasions he has ignored the elementary principles of civil liberties to prevent what he described as "contamination of my people."

He has been an arch enemy of the CIO because he felt it was controlled by Communists, but in recent years has tolerated orderly picketing during strikes where formerly he had pickets thrown in jail.

In 1937 20 CIO members crossed the Hudson River from New York to test an ordinance which forbade distribution of circulars without a police permit. They were put on the return ferry. Norman Thomas tested Hague's opinion on "free speech" once or twice by attempting to speak at public rallies, but was quietly escorted to the city limits.



THE TAX RATE has more than quadrupled under Mayor Hague, but this parade photo epitomizes the support he's always had when it came to marking a ballot



ON THE OTHER HAND, there is a dissident minority in Jersey City. This sign, posted by a departing householder, paraphrases a famous Hague quotation

Highest Tribunal

HAGUE was born in the "Horseshoe," one of the poorer sections of Jersey City, and was expelled from school when he was 13. In later years one of his chief interests was juvenile delinquency. He established a Bureau of Special Service to look after Jersey City's problem children and in this connection once made a statement that became famous as epitomizing his regime.

He was interviewing two boys who had committed minor offenses and wanted to go to work. The mayor approved, but the bureau director pointed out that the boys could not work at their age because of the child labor law.

"Listen," the mayor is said to have roared. "Here is the law. I am the law. These boys go to work."

Hague's enemies exploited the exclamation, made it their battle cry for many years.

Hague's first job was in the machine shops of the Erie Railroad, but he soon turned to politics. By the time he reached voting age he was elected constable. As a ward leader in 1907 he worked hard for the election of Mayor H. Otto Wittpenn, the man he was later to depose.

Hague was first elected to the city commission in 1913 and was reelected in 1917. That year he was named mayor by his fellow commissioners and has been in the chair ever since. Not always has he polled the highest vote among the candidates for the five-man commission, but his associates wouldn't think of naming anyone else mayor.

Has His Own Code

HAGUE made judges, Governors and Senators with a word and undoubtedly could have spoken the same word in his own behalf if he had chosen to do so.

Personally, he has been something of a paradox. Although a teetotaler, he permitted speakeasies to flourish in Jersey City during prohibition. But Hague has always frowned upon women in saloons, and even after repeal required them to sit at tables to be served.

He has always disapproved of cabarets, considering them breeding places of crime and immorality, yet he has been a frequenter of race tracks and has been accused of permitting bookmakers to operate in Jersey City. There is not one dining establishment in this city of 300,000 where dancing is permitted.

Hague has always surrounded himself with a brilliant array of legal talent, and more than once he has needed it. Former United States Senator John Milton and former Chief Justice of the New Jersey Supreme Court Thomas A. Brogan have been among his legal aides for many years.

In 1928 a Republican legislative committee ordered his arrest during an investigation seeking to uncover the source of Hague's wealth. His salary as mayor has never been higher than $8500, yet he has a 14-room duplex in Jersey City's most fashionable apartment building, a seashore summer home for which he paid $125,120.50 cash. He has lived extravagantly and traveled widely and was known to have purchased at least $400,000 worth of property over one seven-year period.

These personal affairs were brought to light during the investigation. When Hague appeared before the committee he refused to answer any ques-

Truman's Private Rail Car Rarely Used

Restive 'Ferdinand' Gets Exercise

By Edward T. Folliard

Post Reporter

WHEN President Truman uses the rails instead of the skyways it almost amounts to an extraordinary event.

Somebody figured it out, in the course of the good-will trip to Canada, that whereas the late Franklin D. Roosevelt as President made 399 trips by railroad, Mr. Truman has made only 12.

Granting that F.D.R. had a much longer time in which to pile up such a record, the fact remains that Mr. Truman has shown a decided preference for traveling in his plane, the "Sacred Cow." He is thus the country's first real flying President.

However, on the rare occasions when the President does decide to travel by rail, the machinery for organizing the trip begins to revolve as if there had never been a lapse.

The Ferdinand Magellan is always waiting in a Washington railroad yard. This is the luxurious private car that was built for the use of Presidents by the Association of American Railways in 1942. It is armorplated and has glass 3 inches thick—thick enough, it is said, to withstand machine-gun bullets. It weighs 285,000 pounds.

The car has a comfortable rear observation room, four bedrooms, a dining room that seats 12, and a galley in which the President's meals are specially prepared. The President's bedroom is the master bedroom, and there is no nonsense about folding things up when they are not being used. The bed in it is just as much of a bed as his White House bed. There are many other comforts of home, including a shower.

'Mitch' in Charge

ON THE CANADIAN trip the remaining three bedrooms in the Magellan were used by Mrs. Bess Truman, Miss Margaret Truman and Fleet Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of staff to the President.

The steward on the President's car is Samuel Mitchell. He was for many years a Pullman porter and began traveling on presidential specials in Harding's time. When the Magellan was sold to the Government, "Mitch" was offered a job as a White House messenger. As such, he could look after the car when it was idle and be available for trips whenever the President was ready to travel.

In advance of a major trip, such as the one last week to Ottawa, "Mitch" must get the car ready, work out menus, figure how much food will be needed and get it aboard. What help he needs he draws from the presidential yacht USS Williamsburg, tied up at the Navy Yard.

For last week's trip, Mitch called on the Williamsburg for two Filipino cooks. One of these did the cooking on the railroad car, and the other helped Mitch with the table.

Aboard the train also was Chief Steward Arthur Prettyman, USN, the President's valet, who began serving in that capacity when the late Mr. Roosevelt was in the White House, and Julia Sharpe, personal maid to Mrs. Truman and Miss Truman.

Radio Car Included

IN a special train like the one that took President Truman to Canada, the Magellan is just one of 10 or 12 cars. The others carry the President's secretaries and military and naval aides, special passengers like Stanley Woodward, Protocol Officer of the State Department; White House Secret Service men, reporters and cameramen, railroad officials and experts, and railroad detectives and uniformed police. Then, of course, there is a crew car and a diner and a club car.

Up next to the locomotive is the radio car. This is manned by a lieutenant and six master sergeants of the Army Signal Corps, whose job it is to maintain communication between the train and the White House.

Dewey Long, transportation officer of the White House, supervises the job of getting up a presidential special; and quite a job it is.

Told that the President is going to make a trip by rail, Long goes into action. In the case of the Canadian trip, he got in touch with Daniel Lee Moorman, general passenger agent here for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, a veteran of presidential trips. This time the trip was to start out over the tracks of the B. & O.

Transportation Officer Long has to get up the lists of all those planning to make the trip, and he not only has to assign them to rooms on the train, but has to arrange for their billeting at the end of the journey. In Ottawa, most members of the party lived in the Chateau Laurier.

Five 'Roads' Used

WHEN the special train pulled out of Washington last Monday night it was in charge of Dan Moorman of the B. & O. Also aboard were Harry A. Karr, division passenger agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad and Herbert Harwood, general passenger agent of the New York Central.

At Claremont, N. J., the train went onto the tracks of the New York Central and a locomotive of that road was substituted for the B. & O. locomotive. Passenger Agent Harwood, at the same time, took over from Moorman.

On the way back—two Canadian railroads had been used in the meantime—the special train used the tracks of the Pennsylvania from Niagara Falls. Then Harry Karr was in charge and a Pennsy locomotive pulled.

To go back to the planning stage, a handpicked crew of Pullman porters was selected for the journey. Nearly all had been on presidential trains before. Fred Fair, the senior porter, was taken off the B. & O.'s Capitol Limited, running between Washington and Chicago, and put in charge of Car No. 2, the one bearing the President's secretaries and aides.

Eugene Lampura, a smiling Filipino, was taken off the Washington-to-New Orleans "Crescent Limited," and put in charge of the buffet on Car No. 2.

Bill Reed, another veteran Pullman porter, was brought in to run the club car. He has traveled on many presidential trains, and also on special trains bearing notables like Mme. Chiang Kai-shek. Ike Hammond, another veteran porter, was brought in and took care of the car of the senior correspondents.

When it was time to start, nearly everybody knew everybody else on the train. James Lyons, a special agent of railroad police, was aboard, and the Secret Service men were glad that he was. He was with the late F.D.R. on every railroad trip he made as President, and knows a lot of things the SS men can't hope to know. One of the locomotive engineers was B. B. Turck, who has been promoted to road foreman, but who was called back to the throttle just for this trip.

The railroad men were happy to have a President riding the rails again, and so were a lot of nonrailroad people.

Churchill Anecdote

IN the club car, a railroad detective recalled the trip he made on a special train with Winston Churchill, then Prime Minister. He was taken in and introduced to Churchill by Inspector Thompson of Scotland Yard.

"Would you like some whisky?" said Churchill.

The railroad detective had to explain that he couldn't drink on duty.

Churchill, however, went ahead and put in an order. Presently two drinks arrived.

The railroad detective, seeing the spare drink, spoke up again and said that liquor was not for him while he was on duty.

Churchill looked up from his desk, took off his glasses and growled in amiable fashion:

"And who the 'ell said it was yours?"

Slum Clearance Setback

By eliminating from the Independent Offices appropriations bill funds required to develop a slum clearance plan, the House Appropriations Committee has in effect decreed indefinite postponement of initial clearance projects. For under existing law, developmental plans have to be completed before actual work begins. And even in the absence of legal barriers, it would be rash to undertake specific projects without a comprehensive program to serve as a guide to decisions as to location and timing.

The arbitrary withholding of funds for planning purposes is defended by the Appropriations Committee on the ground that the removal and reconstruction of housing ought to be deferred until housing needs have been met to some extent and construction costs have been reduced. This argument is utterly irrelevant, since planning outlays are preliminary to the actual work of demolition and construction. Considerable time will necessarily elapse before the planning part of the program is completed. Hence a prompt start is essential to enable the subsequent developmental work to be started whenever conditions become favorable or whenever the need for eliminating slum plague spots becomes so urgent as to warrant action for the sake of the community welfare.

In voting to withhold funds for planning purposes, the House Appropriations Committee has attempted, as on several previous occasions, to set up its judgment against that of Congress, as expressed in existing legislation. Less than a year ago, the District slum-clearance program was enacted. And the Appropriations Commitee may justly be accused of trying to thwart the will of Congress by withholding funds for planning, without which the whole program would be stymied. Washington is accustomed to congressional cutting and paring operations that deny it adequate funds to defray the costs of essential social services. But even this disillusioned, voteless community will be roused to indignation by this latest indefensible move. We trust the public reaction will be so unfavorable as to insure restoration of the deleted funds.

Atomic Inspection

Andrei Gromyko's latest proposal for world atomic energy control wears all the earmarks of a stalling tactic. But, if we insist on talking, it deserves attention as an approach to the problem of international inspection which he terms the most important of the concrete tasks confronting the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission. He is quite right in remarking that "avoiding the solution of such tasks, of course, cannot bring anything good." And it may be, although we do not profess to be very hopeful about it, that candid discussion of the fairly detailed inspection plan Mr. Gromyko has submitted will persuade him and his government that it cannot provide the security which is the sine qua non of international agreement. Mr. Gromyko's statement reveals a larger appreciation of the need for inspection, and a greater willingness to accept extensive inspection, than the Russians have hitherto manifested. That is heartening. But the Soviet plan is still basically at variance with the American idea of how inspection can be made genuinely effective.

The core of the American idea is an international Atomic Development Authority in which shall be vested actual operation and management of the mining of fissionable materials and of the facilities for producing atomic energy. The Soviet idea is that these shall remain under national control subject to periodic inspection by an International Control Commission. Ours might be called a socialistic approach. Theirs is a kind of regulated private enterprise.

The American objection to the Soviet system is that it would place an impossible burden of inspection upon the proposed International Control Commission. Mr. Gromyko says that, among other duties, this commission would investigate the mining of atomic raw materials, check existing stocks of raw materials and unfinished products, study production operations, observe fulfillment of the rules of technical exploitation, analyze data on the production of atomic materials and atomic energy, and investigate cases when suspicion of violations of the atomic weapons convention might arise. To do all this, the international inspectors would have to be everywhere—in every mine, mill and laboratory. We should think that the scope of the inspection inherent in this plan would be intolerable to the Russians.

Most of this inspection would be eliminated if the facilities for mining and manufacturing fissionable materials were placed exclusively in the hands of the Atomic Development Authority envisaged in the American plan. That is our reason for proposing a socialization of all the means of production so far as atomic energy is concerned. Inspection could then be limited to suspected attempts to do privately or nationally what the authority alone would be authorized to do. To a union of socialist republics, the advantages of this sort of socialization ought to be plain. We hope that patient discussion will make them so, though our hope, as we say, is very thin.

Pro And Anti

The President's address at Ottawa persuades us to review the trend in the Administration's political foreign policy in the light of the realization that prompted it, viz, Russia's holdup of world pacification while she expands her sway. In our opinion its emphasis at home and abroad was becoming dangerously anti—anti-Communist. We seemed to have gone a long way since the January 8 statement on China in which General Marshall entered his wise plea against extremism. We embraced the totalitarian Peron because—let's admit it—he is anti-Communist, in spite of the fact that the Truman Doctrine, as the President again expounded it in Canada, is on its negative side anti-totalitarian—of the Right as well as of the Left. Obviously anything merely anti in our policy implies a rear-guard action, and is therefore unworthy of the nation which, as Mr. Churchill puts it, is situated at the world's summit. Surely we are afraid of nobody, and should be afraid of nothing except that we shall be unworthy of our heritage and of our trust.

To be unworthy of that trust would be to concentrate on being anti at the expense of being pro—pro-liberty. The world is in the throes of one of the great panics of human history. In this condition men's minds are prey to fears and doubts which invite the sower of ideas as never before. Keynes noted that at any time it is ideas, not vested interests, that are determinants of good or evil. How much more is this the case in times of great stress! Ideas are catching as a force and a hope and a scheme with which to mold men's destinies. By being merely anti we make no attempt to put something in men's minds except a reminder of the Communist idea we are ranged against in our foreign policy. We increase the power of communism by advertising it and being afraid of it.

Dean Acheson in his letter to Premier Nagy of Hungary said: "I believe that progress and enduring peace for mankind will require not only our patience and understanding but also our steadfast support of the ideals and practices of free men." These are the words that need to be expressed all the time in a political evangel. They resound. However, at this late stage they must be coupled with action. For, as has been said, freedom is a fine horse to ride, but we must ride it somewhere. The burden is upon us as the only nation of any size to have renewed its economic health and as the remaining custodian of the free way of life to build up an idea to oppose an idea—our idea of individual liberty as against the totalitarian idea of tyranny. In other words, we must be pro-liberty, or we might as well resign the struggle.

In peace as in war offense is the best defense, and our practical espousal of liberty is necessary to our own security. In this atomic age the libertarian system is the only one that can make us secure and comfortable. The bomb will eventually bring on trigger-happiness, and only governments based upon popular consent and not on the whim of a dictator can be regarded as responsible. At home, moreover, we risk our own free institutions through witch-hunts which are a rearback of our anti-communism. We risk our very prosperity, too. For the area that is closed by the Russians is closed to our trade, and that, coupled with do-nothingness elsewhere, would ruin our industry and agriculture. What we give, therefore, we have, as the ancient Greeks put it.

To sum up: by keeping to the anti trend we are in danger of exposing ourselves to the world as intellectually bankrupt. Some of the legislators on the Hill, indeed, seem to sense our bankruptcy by seeking to stifle the Voice of America. Anti-communism and nothing else is no policy at all. It will simply make converts for muddle-headed Wallaceism out of people who want dynamism in our conduct of high affairs. Last week the President, Secretary Marshall and Mr. Benjamin Cohen seemed to be trying to put our mind on positive channels.

Strange Reasoning

The argument that a veto of the tax-reduction bill would stiffen public opposition to outlays for European relief and rehabilitation can hardly be taken seriously. It is difficult to follow the twisted reasoning of those who conclude that the more income the Government receives from taxes, the greater will be our reluctance to extend a helping hand to distressed nations. The only conceivable basis for such an inverted argument is an assumption that the public would resent the dashing of its hopes of tax relief and consequently offer stiffer resistance to expenditures regarded as responsible for rejection of the tax bill.

As a matter of fact, the chief pressure for tax reduction has come from members of Congress, not from the public at large. Hence, it is their reaction to a presidential veto of the tax bill that is chiefly important. In view of the overwhelming congressional sentiment in favor of a balanced budget, approval of the tax bill would militate against foreign relief. For Congress would naturally hesitate to authorize for that purpose outlays that would absorb diminished revenues from taxes and might force a return to deficit financing. By that same token, a presidential veto of the tax bill would weaken legislative opposition to the voting of funds to implement the Administration's foreign program.

Wheat Future

Secretary of Agriculture Anderson talks as if we had a 99-year lease on cornucopia when he speaks of limiting wheat acreage next year. Even if we have the record wheat crop that has been predicted for 1947, and even if Russia has an exportable surplus as Secretary Anderson has prophesied, world hunger will remain far from satisfied. We ought to be aware from past experience of the hazard involved by setting our sights too low and underestimating the magnitude of the need. To limit our wheat production arbitrarily now would be to refuse to look at the facts set forth in the recent FitzGerald report for the International Emergency Food Council. That survey of the world's food resources points at best to a long and painful recovery, given the full cooperation of everybody.

In the first place, there is a great difference between prospects and fulfillment. The weather is unpredictable. The present heavy rains and floods in the Midwest, for instance, already have affected corn crops. Wheat is also vulnerable, and a few reverses in growing conditions could materially lessen the 1.4-billion-bushel crop anticipated. Furthermore, our seasons have a way of being cyclical in the United States, and we already have had more than the normal run of good years. Next year we may have a drouth in which all the wheat we can grow will not be enough.

Aside from domestic considerations, it seems to us that Mr. Anderson's narrow tack is bound to have had psychological repercussions abroad. Half the world is eking out a meager existence numbered in calories, and we talk about consciously limiting our production! Certainly we cannot overlook the future welfare of our own food producers in the dubious event that abundance should become a curse. But rather than artificially restricting our food resources, we ought to be thinking of means to enable other peoples to purchase from us the food they so drastically need. We ought to be considering how we can resolve the supreme economic dilemma of our time—reconciling America's tremendous productive capacity with almost illimitable want.

Health And The U. N.

High up on Secretary Marshall's list of "must" legislation in foreign affairs was ratification of the constitution of the World Health Organization. But there is little sign of action on Capitol Hill. The constitution was signed by 63 nations, but does not come into effect until 26 have ratified their signatures to it. Twelve only have as yet gone through this process.

Yet the World Health Organization is one of those instances of functional cooperation which would obviously serve the interests of all peoples. Disease is contagious. That being so, moreover, attention to causes is more effective than treatment of effects. Certainly the best preventive is a determined effort to raise health standards. That is the objective of the W. H. O.—"the attainment by all peoples of the highest possible level of health." And by health the W. H. O. has in view a thing of the mind as well as of the body. Health is defined in the constitution of the W. H. O. as "a state of complete physical, mental, and social well-being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity." It is a new, and perhaps startling, definition. Ills of the mind and the environment the W. H. O. will explore, and its work in this respect may be as valuable as its work in mastering the ills that flesh is heir to.

The W. H. O. will be the focus of all the research going on in the world to advance health and control disease. It is one of the agencies that would make visible, in the philosopher Royce's words, the unity of mankind. Yet, at a time when we are protesting our fealty to the United Nations, the constitution of W. H. O. still lacks American ratification. It has not even come before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. In these matters, surely, our ratification should lead and not follow, for many nations nowadays wait upon the United States before taking action. Congress should always remember the world force that flows from its example.

LANDSCAPE IN GALILEE

The hillside is a cluster of sweet spices, the fields are a mosaic of scarlet and gold;
between thickets of myrtle,
lavender and rue,
the brook comes down, past dog roses and olives
it hurries.

But on the plain
it lingers
among yellow daisies and crimson poppies, camomile and blue hyacinths;
and the lambs dance
among the flowers to the music of the shepherd's pipe.

Letters To The Editor

Arms to Argentina

The citizen who reads Drew Pearson's column regularly has learned to take much of what he says cum grano salis. But surely the indictment he brings against the Truman Administration, as published in The Post of June 9 under the head: "Arms for Argentina—Decision Momentous," cannot be ignored, unless we are to assume that the Administration has embarked upon a program of appeasement of such far-reaching effect as to be capable of shaking the very foundations upon which the Government of the United States rests.

In the name of all the dead who gave their lives to overcome the despotisms in Italy, Germany and Japan, what can we possibly gain by supplying this Peron with the implements of war by which he will be made more powerful? Isn't it still true that we have no way of judging of the future but by the past? If there has ever been an instance where making a despot stronger had any effect other than to make him more beastly, the writer of this letter has been unable to find the record of it.

If the representatives of this Nation charged with the responsibility of administering the affairs of Government have so soon forgotten the effect of appeasing despots, then it would seem to be the part of every enlightened citizen to protest in every conceivable way. A wise people engaged in the great and arduous struggle to maintain liberty should not remain silent when such things as are charged in the Pearson article are spread abroad.

It is hardly possible that the average citizen of this Nation has forgotten that the scrap iron and other materials of war, obtained in this country by Japan, came back to us at Pearl Harbor and at many other points, in such a mammer as to improve the fighting capacity of despotic regimes anywhere in the world, is an act of utmost folly.

"Had Enough?"

The circus with its clowns and elephants has gone. Now the GOP elephant resumes its place on the tub while the "statesmen" proceed with their fantastic whirling dervish dance in the hopes of confusing the people and catching a few votes. Even the elephant on the tub has a dazed look while his keepers cut budgets, raise rents and hold silly hearings with movie actors.

Strange how we closed ranks and won a war. We built planes by the thousands. (It couldn't be done, remember?) We made guns and bullets by the millions but we can't build a half-dozen power dams in the West and harness flooding rivers. We can't build the St. Lawrence seaway; these things putting thousands to work and keeping our factories going.

We can't have military training and keep two million youths out of the labor market for a year or two until they learn something about citizenship and what their country stands for.

We can't even feed ourselves without bending the knee to the profiteer. The box of soap flakes that costs you 43 cents is 18 in Berumda. No wonder the elephant has a dazed look. The slogan in the next election will be "Had Enough?" Guess who will be using it.

Air Power Cut

How does one reconcile the fact, as reported in The Post of June 8, that the President calls on the Nation in the cause of peace to maintain its military strength, with the fact that the President's Budget Bureau is responsible for cutting General Spaatz's request for planes this year from 1700 to 749 planes? Who knows more about our air power, the AAF chief or a bunch of Budget Bureau pencil pushers?

"Mutilated Tax Bill"

I wish to say that your June 11 editorial, "Mutilated Tax Bill," certainly brings before us resident taxpayers and property owners the clear fact that we need a voice in determining our affairs.

We who own property and businesses don't want to dodge our responsibility in paying taxes for our schools, roads, etc., but we do believe that all who use them should contribute to the taxes also. Property owners are now a big contributor of D. C. taxes, if not the largest. We should not be overburdened with higher taxes.

It is indeed a monstrous thing that the House of Representatives has concocted and passed on to the Senate. Government people domiciled here should pay the local income tax, as well as non-Government workers. May the Senate use more judgment in this matter of who should and who should not pay. I think a sales tax would be fairer than what has been cooked up.

Not Typical

As a plain, ordinary citizen of the South I think the picture of our race relations has been badly distorted in the news. The horrible Greenville, S. C., episode is no more typical of the South than the Valentine Day massacre of gangster days is typical of the Mid-West or Murder, Inc., of New York.

National Theater

As a citizen of the Nation's Capital for the past 10 years and as a lover of the arts, I want to express my indignation over the color discrimination carried on by the National Theater.

Just as a child adopts ideas from its parents who set the example of decent, righteous, democratic living, so should the citizenry of our great Nation adopt its ideas from the seat of its democracy—the Nation's Capital. What a mockery it is to use the term "democracy" when its chief ingredient—equal rights of citizens—is left out!

A great South American liberal author recently stated, "true democracy does not recognize any superiority of blood and much less, the aristocracy of the skin. For me, there exists only the aristocracy of intelligence, of ability, of honesty."

The breeding ground which sows the seeds of hatred and prejudice is any place where people are kept in a state of degradation, where they are restricted from enjoying the privileges given to one class and not another, where they are prevented from absorbing knowledge and using that knowledge to better mankind. The basic principle of democracy is to give equal rights to citizens without distinction to religion or color.

My 14-year-old son, who loves plays and concerts, during a discussion we had on this subject, expressed himself, "Mother, it would be terrible for Washington, the Capital of the United States, to close down its only legitimate theater." I answered briefly. "It would be more terrible not to practice democracy by giving vent to our selfish desires to see plays while others, merely because of a darker skin, are denied this privilege."

National Health Insurance

The protest of Senator James A. Murray to the AMA convention, condemning the national physicians' committee as "utterly unfair and un-American," focuses attention on the bitter debate between right and left over national health insurance. We are reminded that Senators Murray and Pepper also are aggressive champions of highly controversial principles in medical economics. If we could conciliate conflicting views a much needed program might get some place.

First they insist that a national health-insurance program begin with complete coverage of all possible medical service needs. The essential and the trivial are lumped together. This is in spite of the fact the inclusion of the trivial increases the cost and difficulties of administering the essential. Practical doctors believe that in the beginning national health-security insurance should be limited to indemnifying those health contingencies whose burdens are inequitable to all. By limiting coverage costs are reduced and administration simplified. Chiseling and inflationary demands by both producers and consumers of basic medical services are reduced to a solvent minimum.

Second, these legislators want doctors to forfeit basic rights of freedom of contract guaranteed all other forms of labor and manpower. Ordinarily there is a reasonable quid pro quo between wages and work. Except in a collective economy superior worker performance means superior rewards. Under the Senators' compulsory health-insurance scheme the doctor's wage would tend to become fixed and arbitrarily controlled by legislation. But the doctor's work schedule and volume of production would be an unpredictable variable. No other form of labor or manpower would agree to such an unfair contract.

Finally these Senators regard insistence upon free choice of doctor by the patient a shibboleth of the medical reactionary. Correctly they claim that highest quality professional skills are obtainable at clinics and hospital centers. Neither can we deny that the diagnosis and treatment of serious and costly illness beyond the competency of family doctors is relegated to consultants and experts. In these instances free choice of doctor admittedly is an irrelevance. The results are beyond criticism.

But these sincere gentlemen forget they are referring to a mere 20 per cent of our Nation's health security needs. It is in the other 80 per cent of medical service need that free choice of doctors is a "must." All authorities agree that this is the domain of the general practitioner's competency. It is the field of the ordinary and the routine. In it the simplest of employer-employe contracts must obtain at all times. This means it should only be necessary for a patient to want a particular doctor and for the doctor to understand that his continued employment depends solely upon the patient's pleasure and wishes.

This traditionally simple contract permits the patient to reward and encourage superior performance. It is also the only practical method by which the patient can discourage unsatisfactory service by economic sanctions. It makes the total professional resources of a community freely accessible to all without administrative restraints. Free choice of doctors among competing eligibles leaves the patient rather than the doctor or the State in economic control of the healing arts. That should be the goal of both our political right and political left.

Tildy Of Hungary

By Joachim Joesten

On Borrowed Time

UNDOUBTEDLY the most harried chief executive in Europe these days is President Zoltan Tildy of Hungary. What with a Soviet general dictating his appointments, a Communist-controlled police watching his steps, America cutting his credits and his own party falling asunder on the eve of a national election, the first President of the Hungarian Republic is in an unenviable position. The chances are slight that he will serve his full four-year term, which runs till February 1, 1950.

If Tildy steps down, or is forced out of office like his good friend and party comrade, former Premier Ferenc Nagy, the last bulwark against total Russian domination of Hungary will be gone. And one of the most meteoric careers of our time will have come to an untoward end.

That Tildy ever was able to make his way to the top under Soviet control is something of a political miracle. A baron, landowner, clergyman and middle-of-the-road politician, he had nothing to recommend himself to the Russian military authorities. Except, perhaps, his personal charm, suave manners and vast erudition.

IN A WAY, Tildy is a "foreigner" in the country that picked him for the highest administrative office. He was born in 1899 at Losonc (Lusenec) in the border Province of Kismaria, which changed hands several times in the past few decades.

The scion of a Protestant (Calvinist) family in a predominantly Catholic country, Tildy as a youth was sent to a Presbyterian college at Belfast, in Northern Ireland, where he studied theology and history. The outbreak of war in 1914 forced him to return to Hungary, where he some years later was ordained a Calvinist minister.

Tildy's first steps in political life were taken under the guidance of Tibor Eckhardt, to whose Small Holders Party he rallied in the period after the First World War. As Hungary's political life under the Horthy regime became more and more reactionary, Tildy joined, and then headed, the liberal opposition against Eckhardt within the party.

In 1936, Tildy was elected to Parliament on the Small Holders ticket. During the war he took over the party leadership from Eckhardt, entering into a political alliance with the Social-Democrats against the pro-Nazi forces. When Hungary, early in 1944, was completely occupied by German troops, Tildy, along with the Socialist Leader Arpad Szakasits and other anti-Nazis, was arrested and taken to a concentration camp in Germany.

FREED AS a result of the German collapse, Tildy returned to a country conquered by the Red Army and controlled by Communist influences. He promptly set about reorganizing the Small Holders Party and led it to a spectacular triumph at the general election of November 4, 1945. Capturing more than 57 per cent of the popular vote (against 17 per cent for the Communists), the Small Holders took 222 of the 420 seats in the National Assembly.

As leader of the victorious party, Tildy assumed the task of forming Hungary's first democratic government. Under the circumstances of Russian occupation, however, he was unable to exploit his electoral triumph fully. The Communists, under the vigorous leadership of the Moscow-trained Matyas Rakosi, secured control of the police and other strategic positions in the administration, gaining an influence wholly out of proportion with their political strength.

Following the proclamation of the republic, on February 1, 1946, the National Assemby, by acclamation, elected Tildy President. At the same time, Tildy's right-hand man, Ferenc Nagy, became Prime Minister.

Under Nagy's premiership, the Small Holders Party, yielding step by step to relentless Communist pressure, slowly committed political suicide. Within one year, 29 members of the party were expelled from the National Assembly on charges of being "pro-Fascist." As a result, the Small Holders, once comfortable majority in Parliament was practically abolished, while the Socialist-Communist bloc asserted itself ever more strongly.

Now, Nagy himself has become a victim of one of the party purges imposed from the outside, to which he so often acquiesced in the past. As a result of these developments, the leadership of the Small Holders Party has definitely passed to the left wing, which has resigned itself to Red control.

Tildy himself now finds himself in an almost impossible situation. Never a very strong character, the slight, dark-haired President—who, incidentally, is one of the most camera-shy statesmen in Europe—may well be forced to resign. The hurried departure from New York on May 28 of the President's wife, Mme. Elizabeth Zoltan Tildy, after a five-week stay in the United States, could be interpreted as a sign in this direction.

Washington Critics

It would be amusing if it were not exasperating to have the bearers of good old American names such as "Galarza" and "Simsarian" undertake to tell us just how to run our city and inform us all about Americanism and democracy. Many people here are not only descendents of the men that made a Washington and what it stands for possible, but have for four or five generations cherished the city which their heavy taxes have paid for so largely, and have given their time and their best efforts to civic betterment of their home town.

If these critics find life in Washington so obnoxious, why not settle elsewhere? Perhaps the Harlem district in New York, for instance, would be more congenial, since the restrictions they find so annoying here are happily absent there.

How We Fill a Crucial Position

By Drew Pearson

ONLY a few insiders know the real story of how the State Department happened to pick former Gov. Dwight Griswold of Nebraska to head the all-important Greek aid program. But it reveals a shocking disregard for the fact that the fate of American foreign policy for the next 10 years stands or falls in Greece.

What happened was that General Marshall telegraphed Gen. Lucius Clay in Germany asking him to release Henry Parkman, a Boston attorney on duty in Germany, so Parkman might head the Greek program. Clay wired back that he couldn't spare Parkman, but suggested that Marshall take Griswold instead.

That was how the man for the most important post this Nation has filled in years was selected.

Actually the State Department had three months in which to look around and find the best-qualified man in the country. But nothing happened. While Congress debated, the State Department procrastinated. Then Mark Ethridge, publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal and experienced in Balkan affairs as a result of two study trips for the State Department, was proposed. But Senator Vandenberg vetoed him as a New Dealer.

Next, Vandenberg's friend, Paul Hoffman, head of the Studebaker Motor Co., was asked to head the Greek program. But after repeated invitations he declined.

Finally the State Department turned to Henry Parkman of Boston, and ended with Governor Griswold instead.

It may be that Griswold can fill the bill. Let's hope so. He is a patriotic American with a forthright record of fighting isolation. But in Greece he will have to fight some of the most ruthless political bandits in Europe, a complicated, poverty-stricken economy, plus a state of semiwar. Putting the barren hillsides of Greece and the rubble-strewn cities of Piraeus and Salonika back on their feet is going to be a lot tougher than governing the relatively serene prairies of Nebraska.

Under the Dome

THE WEST COAST split between the Roosevelt family and Truman Democrats isn't going to be patched up easily. When former Democratic Treasurer Ed Pauley turned the heat on the White House to withdraw Secretary of the Treasury Snyder and Gael Sullivan from the recent Los Angeles Democratic dinner, Jimmy Roosevelt picked up the phone, dialed Pauley and snapped: "This means open political war in California and defeat for Truman in '48" . . . The political demise of Senator Bilbo has had a stimulating effect on Mississippi education. Hitherto, Bilbo has passed upon major appointments to Mississippi State schools and colleges. Now he doesn't . . . The Thomas Un-American Affairs Committee made a big hullabaloo demanding that Eugene Dennis give his real name when he testified before the committee. Wonder why the same committee didn't make Movie Actor Robert Taylor give his real name? . . . The mayors of North Tonawanda and Tonawanda, N. Y., plus local housing authorities, are waging a hot campaign to improve veterans' housing. They claim their main obstacle is Dewey's State housing commissioner, Herman T. Stichman . . . Three combat veterans—a soldier, a sailor and a marine—are working on legislation whereby no enlisted man who served in combat as a commissioned officer can be deprived of his commission later, so long as his conduct is satisfactory. The three veterans are Congressmen Ed Mitchell of Indiana, Dayton Phillips of Tennessee and Donald Jackson of California, all Republicans.

Merry-Go-Round

ABLE CHINESE Ambassador Wellington Koo called a spade a spade when speaking off the record before a group of Congressmen recently. Koo was asked by Ohio's Homer Ramey about the cost of the Chinese Army. "Almost 50 per cent of our budget goes to support the military," admitted Koo, "and I expect this to be increased in the future" . . . Tip to the Pendergast machine in Kansas City: Did you notice what General Franco is doing with Spanish ballots immediately after the election in Spain? He has ordered them burned pronto . . . No wonder. Opposition to Franco is spurting rapidly. In Catalonia alone, more than 6000 Spaniards were arrested for participating in a strike. Uncensored diplomatic reports state that Franco's police are using Jap methods to torture political prisoners . . . When business bites business, it's news. A rebellion is going on inside the powerful National Association of Manufacturers. It's led by James F. Newcomb of the printing industry, who called a meeting of small-business members of the NAM to propose a separate small-business lobby. The revolt is still simmering.

GOP Solidarity a Taft Triumph

AN ALWAYS important and sometimes pregnant aspect of American politics, inherent in our two-party system, is the varying solidarity of the two parties from time to time. Always there is cleavage; that is a permanent condition. But the cleavage becomes important only when the dissenters reach a number that makes them formidable.

The degree of solidarity in both parties is just now at a stage which permits statement of it with almost statistical exactness. What makes this possible is the votes, in the House and Senate, on final passage of the labor bill before it was sent to President Truman for approval or veto.

The solidarity of the majority party is so extraordinary as to be a political phenomenon. In the Senate just two Republicans voted against the labor bill, Morse of Oregon and Langer of North Dakota. That is dissent at its irreducible minimum. Hardly any time in the last half century was Republican dissent so small. Throughout much of the period there was a much larger dissent and a more or less definitely organized one—the following of the senior Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, ranging from some 12 to 20.

In the House 12 Republicans voted against the labor bill while 217 supported it. Twelve dissenters out of 229 Republicans voting is roughly one out of 19. Measured by the total Republican membership of the House, the percentage of dissenters is even smaller; it is hardly a dissent at all.

Tax Split Conceded

THIS SOLIDARITY of the Republicans, as measured by votes on the labor bill, runs counter to predictions made at the time the Republicans took control of Congress, that the party would run into cleavage. The predicters, to find justification now, would need to cite the votes on measures other than the labor bill.

True, there was measurable dissent of Republicans from the party position on the tax-reduction bill and some others. But the labor bill is a true test. On that the issue was ideological and fundamental; it was a lineup of schools of thought directly opposed.

Labor legislation, more than any other one specific idea or condition, was the issue in the election last November. When the country gave control of Congress to the Republicans, party leaders considered that the party had been given a mandate to enact labor legislation. This the party proceeded to do, and the votes for and against the bill they produced are a true test of party regularity or dissent.

The very exceptional solidarity of the Republicans has a bearing on the party's choice of a presidential nominee. It is difficult to suppose the nomination will go to anyone not recognized as a party regular and as a conservative on fundamental matters. This whole condition suggests interesting speculation.

Dewey Still Favorite

BECAUSE the Republican solidarity in Congress was conspicuously achieved on the labor bill, and because passage of that bill was a triumph for Senator Taft, it might be supposed that by this fact Taft would be advanced as a presidential possibility, though in fact, at this moment, common judgment looks upon Governor Dewey as most likely to be the Republican nominee.

The relation of Taft to the labor bill makes a remarkable record. Those who at the beginning of Republican control of Congress predicted party cleavage included in their prophecy assertions that Taft as a leader could not hold his party together.

From the outset Mr. Taft proceeded to accept responsibility for the labor legislation. He voluntarily took the post of chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, which would draft the Senate version of the bill. To membership on the committee he invited a Republican whose views on labor legislation differed from his own, Senator Ives of New York, and in the deliberations of the committee practiced conciliation.

In the end Taft's name, as author on the Senate side, was attached to a bill that made a very striking record. Not only did it have the support of all but two of the Republicans in the Senate, and nearly 19 out of every 20 Republicans in the House—even more striking it had the support of a majority of the Democrats in both the Senate and the House.

Such a record, especially the Democratic support of the bill, would ordinarily commend Taft for the Republican presidential nomination. The present fact, however, is that in the common judgment Taft's chance is exceeded by that of Dewey.

A-Guardian Says Cranks Are Thinning

By Ruth Brigham

FORMER Secret Service Chief Frank J. Wilson paused from guarding atomic secrets today long enough to discuss the Roosevelts, crackpots, diaper details and Margaret Truman.

The man who headed the Nation's security during the perilous war years until his retirement a short time ago, was casting no aspersion of the late chief Executive when he said:

"There were more crackpots around the White House when F. D. R. was President than since Truman went in. But then, that was wartime—and, too, F. D. R. was the kind who inspired fanatic loyalty or fanatic hatred."

"Crackpots, or mentally ill" persons have been a problem around the White House during all administrations, and there is a special department to handle such people," Wilson explained.

The late Jim Sloan—"a real diplomat"—was in charge of the White House detail from the time of Theodore Roosevelt until he retired in Franklin Roosevelt's Administration. James Stringfellow inherited the post—"but it isn't what it once was," Wilson said.

Elephantine File

WHEN such persons—with real or imaginary grievances—appear at the White House they are interviewed, placated or given medical treatment—whatever the occasion demands.

But once dismissed, they are not forgotten—particularly when they seem unbalanced or dangerous.

They are photographed and documented into the files. And if the President ever visits the area in which they live—even years later—the suspect is located and watched.

Wilson, now consultant on security to the Atomic Energy Commission, said guarding the Roosevelt family in wartime posed a big problem — with Roosevelt grandchildren scattered from Maine to Florida and California. He laughed:

"The men called that the diaper detail—and they didn't much like it. But it was of vital importance, because kidnaping of the President's grandchild during the war would have had international complications."

He described Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as "calm, collected and easy to do business with. She could have really set us a pace—but she usually requested no personal protection or escort."

The Secret Service is responsible for the safety of the President at all times, and members of his family "if requested."

Guards have been requested for Margaret Truman, he stated, at all times—"even when she's out with dates."

Bucking World Tide

THE concern which many commentators show over the details of the Taft-Hartley bill may cause them to miss the real significance of that measure. Whatever else this bill may be it is added evidence that affairs in the United States are, for the moment, anyhow, going against the world-wide tide. It is evidence that in economic policy and the position of trade unionism, the United States is deviating from the pattern which today prevails in the balance of the world.

There can be little doubt as to what that pattern is. It is the pattern of a highly regulated (or planned) economy. Under it the major decisions are made by government, not by individuals.

The scope of private property is progressively circumscribed and freedom of personal action limited. What we call private business and competition are on their way out. Labor unions, where this pattern is highly developed and long established, appear to have lost the freedom which in theory and history was considered an essential attribute of the modern labor movement.

Government in Miniature

IN this country we are experiencing a strong and widespread reaction against these trends. The reaction showed itself in the rapidity with which we abandoned wartime economic controls. It shows itself again in the large majorities by which the Taft-Hartley bill was carried in the House and Senate.

Perhaps the most interesting feature of the deliberations of Congress was the understanding it displayed of the issues of labor relations and their larger implications. It was made clear, as it always should have been, that unions are regulatory agencies with large powers of control.

When unions are small and few in number their power to regulate is of little practical importance and, hence, remains unnoticed. As unions become universal, extending their control over the major economic activities of a country, their acts and policies become matters of paramount importance. They can no longer be safely disregarded. For they have become a species of government, wielding extensive powers of regulation over both industry and employes. Allowed to pursue their policies unhampered, they would soon destroy competitive business and personal liberty.

Applying the Brakes

RECOGNIZING the outcome of these trends, Congress, in its new labor bill, moved to reinforce the American scheme of things where it seemed most vulnerable. It sought to curb the growth of union monopoly. It endeavored to make the virtues and demerits of unionism a subject of public debate. It undertook to protect employes against unions as well as against employers. And its hope was to effect a measure of decentralization in the conduct of labor relations.

These aims run counter to the tides of economic and labor policy in Europe and England. Congress has chosen this path in order to conserve the system of economic organization which Americans today appear to want conserved. What is hard to understand is the stubborn opposition of the leaders of organized labor to goals that have so much to commend them to unions and to their members.

The Gallup Poll

9 Democrats 'Graded'

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

WHEREAS the Republican Party has a fistful of 1948 candidates to choose from, the Democratic Party at the moment is pretty much a one-man affair so far as 1948 is concerned.

Out of nine men who have been talked about as possible Democratic standard-bearers, President Truman stands out far above the rest in terms of favorable vote among the party rank and file. Democratic voters also have a favorable impression of Gen. George C. Marshall and of James F. Byrnes. But others in the list of nine do not seem to have caught the imagination of Democratic voters.

These facts are shown in a new type of poll on political leaders conducted by the Institute. Democratic voters were asked to state frankly whether they have a favorable or unfavorable impression of various prominent Democrats as possible presidential material. Last month this same type of poll was conducted among Republican voters, in which their impressions of possible GOP candidates were measured.

The Democratic voter poll showed the following results:

Will you tell me frankly what you think of each of these men as Democratic presidential material for 1948? Generally speaking, is your opinion of them favorable or unfavorable?

The figures are not to be interpreted as an index of the number of Democrats who would favor the actual nomination of any one of the men listed. Some voters have a favorable impression of two or three of the leaders, but have a distinct preference for one where it comes to expressing a choice for nominee.

GOP voters, when questioned last month in a similar poll on Republican leaders, gave Gov. Thomas E. Dewey the highest ratio of favorable votes as compared to unfavorable. In the case of Harold E. Stassen, Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, Senator John W. Bricker and Gov. Earl Warren, the percentage of favorable votes among Republican voters also exceeded unfavorable by a wide margin. In the case of Senator Robert A. Taft and Senator Leverett Saltonstall the ratio was approximately equal.

Matter of Fact

The Evolution of Foreign Policy

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

REPRESENTATIVE Thomas L. Owens of Chicago is not easily fooled. He knows, as he indicated in a debate in the House last Tuesday, what all this talk of foreign spending is about. "I believe," he said, "that it is just a question of going on and on, in an attempt to stop the economy program of the Republican Party. They are going to stop it any way they can. They will get us into war to stop it, just so that they do stop our program to balance the budget and establish real economy in our governmental operations."

This conclusion that the foreign crisis is really a clever plot against the Republican economy program is chiefly interesting as an accurate barometer of the mood of a considerable proportion of Congress. This mood is not confined to the House, although there it comes to its fullest flower. One Senator, himself entirely aware of the real meaning of the foreign situation, has remarked flatly that "there's going to be one hell of a fight before the Senate will approve another cent for spending abroad."

There is, of course, another side to the coin. A small group of the most powerful Senate leaders have been conferring regularly with Undersecretary of State Dean Acheson. These Senators are fully alive to the grim facts which underlay Secretary Marshall's historic speech at Harvard. Their leader, Senator Vandenberg, is expected soon to make a dramatic speech in which he will fire the first gun in the campaign to awaken Congress to the desperate urgency of the situation. Yet it will be a long and hard campaign.

Among Vandenberg's own colleagues such unimpressive statesmen as Harry P. Cain and James P. Kem, endowed with matchless ignorance of foreign affairs, are growing restless under Vandenberg's leadership. It will be an even longer and harder campaign in the House, as the debate in which Owens took such distinguished part made clear.

Keystone Diagnostician

PERHAPS the most stirring oratory during the debate was contributed by Leon H. Gavin of Pennsylvania. Gavin started his speech by remarking crisply, "Mr. Chairman, internationalist this and internationalist that." This served as an adequate introduction to Mr. Gavin's description of a disease called "Washingtonitis." In a few cogent paragraphs Gavin brought vividly home to his colleagues the dread effects of this disease. Particularly vulnerable were those Congressmen who came to Washington "from the farms of America—good, sound, clear-thinking Americans."

The first onslaught of the disease "causes one to feel that he has become a great statesman, with the weight of all the world's problems on his shoulders." Gavin put his finger unerringly on the source of the infection. If the innocent rustic solon "gets a few invitations to the embassies for tea or cocktails—well, he is gone, he is sunk, he is all out for any crackpot idea that will count him in with the world thinkers or the world dogooders."

Gavin then went on to make it clear that, "country boy from the rural areas of the great State of Pennsylvania" though he was, he had successfully withstood the virus.

Wolverine Rhetorician

THE debate concerned the State Department's information and educational exchange program, a relatively minor matter which involves no colossal appropriation. Yet it served to bring to light the mood of deep and dark suspicion with which many members of the House approach the whole matter of American foreign policy.

J. Caleb Boggs of Delaware intimated that Gen. Bedell Smith, American Ambassador to Russia, was really convinced of the superiority of the Soviet system, because he had supported the State Department's program. Perhaps the most remarkable suspicion was voiced by that redoubtable statesman, Clare E. Hoffman of Michigan. Speaking on the bill's provision for the exchange of students with foreign countries, Hoffman revealed that the real purpose was to establish, under the aegis of the State Department, an espionage net directed against the United States.

In a sentence as remarkable for its construction as for its meaning, Hoffman declared:

"By this bill you are putting into the hands of the Secretary of State and his outfit down there, the outfit that harbored the Reds for the last 10 years, who had them inside, putting it in the power of the Department of State to bring over from abroad the agents of other countries and turn them loose in our industrial world to learn our processes, how we do things, how we get mass production, how we make things better than they do. How do you like that kind of procedure?"

Mr. Hoffman's plaintive question went unanswered unless the subsequent remark of Walter E. Brehm of Ohio can be considered an answer. "I say," said Brehm, "we are confused." That would appear to be an understatement.

'Taint Funny

YET, although the House debate had its entertainments, its larger implications were wholly serious. Gavin, Owens, Boggs, Hoffman and their allies in the debate accurately reflect the mood of a large proportion of Congress, which no doubt in turn accurately reflects the mood of a large proportion of the country. It is this mood which has induced some of the better informed American policy-makers, who know that this country is faced with the real possibility of a wholly disastrous political and strategic defeat, to succumb in their weaker moments to a sense of impending doom.

HANDSOME SPORTS JACKETS & SLACKS
FIT OUR WAY OF SUMMER LIVING

It's good summer sense to turn to sports jackets and slacks for business wear, vacationing, Sunday afternoons at the club. Versatile clothes like these afford a comfortable, informal approach to hot weather without sacrificing on appearance. Lewis & Thos. Saltz have an extraordinarily good selection of fine, lightweight wool shetland jackets, tailored by some of the best makers in America. Conventional 3-button models, some with center vent, in Tan, Brown and Grey mixtures. All sizes in stock.

$45 & $55

As for slacks, our stock is now one of the largest in our history! . . . one that even excels stocks of prewar days. Smooth, silky Doeskins, Gabardines and Coverts, grey Flannels, Tropical Worsteds and the celebrated Forstmann Gabardines. All are handsomely tailored and perfect-fitting . . . with pleats, zippers and long lengths for cuffs. Sizes 29 to 44.

Army-Navy Battle Deadline On 60 Million Latin Arming

By Thomas F. Reynolds

THE Army and Navy, which already have peddled 37 million dollars worth of arms to Latin America at a five million dollar bargain price, are turning on heat to get congressional approval of a more sweeping arms cooperation program.

The service departments are not making official estimates of the cost of the broad plan. But official sources privately put minimum costs at 60 million dollars and maximum costs at many times that.

The principal opponent of the plan to put United States arms and equipment in the hands of the American republics—including Argentina—is time. A similar attempt died without action in the last Congress. Time is running out in the present session, and despite President Truman's enthusiastic indorsement, the bill still has not been introduced.

The whole issue of arming the American republics has developed with a strange dearth of national debate. Yet the bill is a turning point in United States relations with the hemisphere neighbors.

Until the Second World War, Pan-American relations were almost exclusively confined to political, economic and social cooperation. But when it seemed possible that the Axis might actually attempt an invasion of the bulge of Brazil, a new type of military collaboration was born.

This cooperation was codified in March, 1945, in the Act of Chapultepec, in which the American republics covenanted to leap to one another's aid with armed force if any one became the target of aggression. Argentina was not invited to that conference because the Peron regime was still deeply colored with Nazis sympathy and collaboration. But, by common consent of the signatories, Argentina later was permitted to become a party to the agreement on condition it purge itself of Nazi influences.

Out of Chapultepec also came a United States promise that the wartime covenant would be converted into a permanent, postwar defense alliance of the 21 American Republics. That pledge was made at the San Francisco Conference by then Secretary of State Stettinius as a sop to the Latin Republics for this country's assumption of veto rights in the United Nations Security Council.

Diplomats Bypassed

THAT promise has yet to be redeemed. But out of it is growing a new concept of Pan-Americanism, a concept of close to an armed military alliance.

The State Department merely pledged mutual assistance. The armed services are taking the pledge a step further. Realists as always, they claimed that mutual assistance would not have too much meaning unless the Latin nations had the guns, planes, tanks and ammunition to back up their promises. That idea alarmed and upset the State Department. But the services went ahead with their plans.

Although this may be the most fundamental and far-reaching decision affecting Pan-American relations in this century, the plan was drafted by the admirals and generals rather than the civilian experts of the State Department. And the Army-Navy sponsorship stems from a determination to anchor the prospective military alliance on the United States general staffs and United States war factories.

The new friendship between the White House and Argentina makes that alliance imminent. The State Department now expects that the 21 American republics will meet at Rio de Janeiro in August to draft a treaty which will convert Pan-Americanism into a permanent military agreement.

Candy to a Baby

THE United States staffs want the arms authorization as a trading point when that meeting convenes. Despite the protestations of Peron's friendship for this country, they expect Argentina to arrive with the nucleus of a so-called "austral bloc"—a group of South American nations which look to Peron's strange brand of democracy for leadership instead of to the United States.

The United States, however, can play that kind of a game also. When our negotiators arrive at Rio, the Army and Navy staffs want them to be packing briefcases bulging with order blanks for modern American weapons.

Arms have an overpowering fascination for Latin Americans. In many Latin nations the faction which packed the most guns has been the faction which stood in power. That technique was used only last month by Nicaraguan Dictator Somoza. The bulk of his army's weapons originated in the United States.

The Braden Threat

A COLLECTIVE sigh of relief came from the State Department, the armed services and the White House when Spruille Braden resigned as Assistant Secretary of State without making a public fight over the arms plan.

Most accounts of the squeeze that forced out Braden centered on his opposition to Peron's quasi-fascist activities. Actually, Braden met his first bitter defeat on the Army-Navy proposal.

The War-Navy plan is sweeping. It would authorize President Truman to institute large-scale training of Latin or Canadian soldiers and sailors; to undertake modernization of Latin and Canadian military equipment, and to trade modern United States equipment for obsolete arms of our neighbor nations.

While Braden unsuccessfully sought to sway the White House, the Army, Navy and the State Department commissioner of surplus property disposal went ahead with an "interim program." Their experience, Braden claimed, validated his contention that the larger program would initiate an arms race.

Doubled the Bid

COLOMBIA and Peru are on good terms, but when Colombia arranged to purchase 13 United States combat planes it created a sensation in Peru. Peruvian military and naval attaches were pounding on the State Department doors demanding that their government be sold some combat planes. The surplus disposal men bowed. Peru came up with an air fleet more than twice as large.

Braden argued that the incipient arms race between Peru and Colombia was more real than the prospect of regulating armaments by a treaty that might be negotiated in the misty future.

But he was overruled. Secretary of State Marshall sided with the War and Navy Departments and Mr. Truman acted on their recommendations.

THE WAY THINGS STACK UP

. . . From the Denver Post

Plan to Arm Latins Gets Editorial Nod

TO PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S proposals for arming the nations of the Western Hemisphere with American weapons, the country's editorial writers return a prevailing "yes," a few "yes buts" and some "maybe nots."

The Los Angeles Times regards the plan as "in a sense a fulfillment of an obligation the United States undertook when the Act of Chapultepec was signed two years ago." It believes that "aside from the purely military advantages to be gained from standarized weapons throughout the continent, the United States would . . . be in a far better position to improve relations with the Latin republics."

The Miami Herald thinks that "if our neighbors' military men train in our schools, use our equipment, get close to the heart and the practice of our democracy, we'll come closer to that spiritual and cultural unity which makes for enduring hemispheric solidarity."

The Atlanta Journal feels that the proper implementation of the Act of Chapultepec means "military organization, equipment and training methods (should) be so standardized that they could be broadly interchangeable among the cooperating countries."

The Montreal Star finds it reasonable that "the United States must necessarily take the lead in this area, by reason of its great strength," and feels that "it is not intended that the United States should embark upon a course that would place other nations in military subjection." The Star introduces another point: That by furnishing Latin America arms the United States would make it "easier for a number of countries in this hemisphere to do their share" in carrying out U. N. commitments under the Charter.

Supplementary 'Doctrine'

"CONGRESS should now be prepared to give more favorable consideration to the President's bill enabling this country to cooperate with Canada and Latin American republics in the training, organization and equipping of their armed forces," thinks the San Francisco Chronicle. It sees the program as a further check on Russia.

The arms program is seen by the St. Paul Pioneer Press as a means of bringing "strength to other South American nations at the same time that the isolation of Argentina is more sharply defined."

The St. Louis Post Dispatch makes vague references to some disadvantages in the whole program, without specifying them. In total, however, it concludes: "In some ways it is altogether to the good, in others it represents necessary evils, but its worst aspects are better than their alternatives." It is of the opinion that it is "in the tradition of our whole hemispheric history from the Monroe Doctrine onward" to "handle these matters by voluntary association within the Americas."

Some of the "buts" expressed editorially are the lengthened shadow of General Samoza of Nicaragua. Thoughts of him prompt the Courier Journal of Louisville to warn that "coordination of arms and military techniques are not all the requisites for peace among the Americas." It cites the Samoza coup as evidence of the need for stability of other kinds. "There must be maturity," it warns, "political, economic and social—before the foundations of peace and understanding may be deemed secure. We must work not only for common methods of warfare. We need also a common code of democracy."

The Milwaukee Journal wants to know with whom we would deal—"today's dictator or yesterday's presidente or tomorrow's junta." "Would we," it asks, "be arming Latin American nations against attack from another hemisphere or merely furnishing them with better equipment to turn against one another or against other factions in their own countries?" Improvement in economic conditions and not arms is the "first line of defense," the Journal believes. It recommends: "Let's pause long enough to see just where we are going and whether it is the right way. It may not be."

The Chicago Daily News warns that "the Nicaragua revolution, following revolutions in Guatemala and Salvador, reminds us that you can't be sure who will finally get hold of the weapons. They might reinforce our enemies." It also introduces a tactical consideration—a counsel against the dispersal of force.

The Dallas Morning News takes note that "Somoza in Nicaragua was setting up a military oligarchy while Congress was reading the Truman message." Yet it thinks that hemispheric solidarity may be the only refuge if the United Nations experiment fails. "The solitary wayfarer," it opines, "has everything to fear."

Buernos Aires Blasts

ARGENTINE newspapers dislike Mr. Truman's proposal. La Prensa, which has tangled repeatedly with the Peron government, strongly objects to the plan as a "unilateral act."

"No decision on the standardization of armaments should be taken without deliberation and decision in a Pan American conference;" it says.

"The new plan is a continental question and not one exclusively for the United States. One must not forget that the security and peace of America do not depend on the quantity and quality of armaments.

"The best guarantee of security is the perfection of democracy. Modern uniforms and arms in the hands of antidemocratic governments will never be a source of security or tranquility for the Americas."

La Nacion feels that the Truman proposal should be studied "in the face of the few centers of naziism and fascism still remaining in some places and the increase elsewhere of totalitarianism of the extreme left."

U. S. Mission Facing Oriental Problem in Greece's Basic Rift

By M. W. Fodor
Post Reporter

ATHENS, June 14.—Our State Department instinctively acted in the right way when it placed Greece under the Near Eastern Division. Hellas may be the father of Western civilization, but the country still stands, at least with one foot, in the East. And Kipling sang: "East is East . . ."

If you want to know Greece, you must get acquainted with the mentality of the Oriental bazaar. The Greeks are the nicest and the most hospitable people in all southeastern Europe, but at the same time they are the shrewdest and most cunning people on earth. If you attest your assertions five times then add your "word of honor," there will still be doubt in their minds.

Our commission is coming into this atmosphere to settle the fate of a country badly torn by civil war. The political situation is extremely complicated, yet if we reduce it to essentials it is simple. Not long ago there were 27 political parties in Greece. Now there are 8 or 9. Yet fundamentally the cleavage is clearcut: here the Royalists; on the other side of the fence, the Republicans.

Century-Old Roots

THIS CLEAVAGE is not apparent in the streets. Outwardly the monarchical question appears to be remote, almost nonexistent. Yet fundamentally the country is deeply divided on the issue. And while the Communists are hardly stronger here than in Austria, and certainly not as strong (numerically) as in Hungary, the secret of their success is that they exploit this cleavage.

Until the 1880s Greece was a typical monarchy. Only the islands, such as Hydra, Aegina and Caphallonia, entertained republican sentiments. The Greeks turned on Bavarian Otto I in 1863 and chased him out, but merely to replace him with George I of the Schleswig-Holstein - Sonderburg - Gluecksburg dynasty.

Then Greece gained Larissa from the Turks. In 1913 it obtained Macedonia, Thessaly, Western Thrace, Epiros and Crete.

Those people, formerly under Turkish rule, lacked the monarchist traditions of the Peloponnesians and Atticans. A strong republican sentiment developed, led by the islanders and the Macedonians. When the Greco-Turkish War ended in disaster for Constantine's forces in 1922, the army revolted under the leadership of Cols. Nicholas Plastiras and Stylianos Gonatas and precipitated a change to a republic.

At the same time the Turks evicted 1.4 million Greeks, from Asia Minor. Eighty-five per cent of these refugees were bankers, businessmen, artisans, professional people. Turkey's new ruler, Kemal Ataturk, would not permit them to take away their wealth, and were pauperised.

As they were deeply devoted to Plastiras and lacked the Royalist sentiments of the native Greeks, they became staunch republicans—northern Greece, the islands and the refugees being the backbone of the republican movement.

Fluctuating Sympathies

HOW strong are the royalist and republican movements, respectively? It is hard to tell in a mercurial country. But there are certain indications.

On April 13, 1924, there was a plebiscite on the question. The vote was 2 to 1 in favor of a republic. When Gen. N. Condylis made his coup d'etat in October, 1935, the plebiscite arranged by him, undoubtedly with intimidation and terror, gave a 90 per cent vote for a kingdom. However, the election held under Condylis in January, 1936, gave a majority to Venizelos, who opposed the royalist regime.

In the elections of 1932 and 1933, the last orderly ballots in Greece, monarchism and republicanism balanced each other almost 50-50. On September 1, 1946, the plebiscite on the form of the state yielded a 2-to-1 proportion in favor of a monarchy. Is that ratio true today? Who knows?

It is certain, however, that Greece's politics, whatever the names of the different parties, hinge on this cleavage. And under the present catastrophic circumstances Greece cannot afford such a split. It was a bad mistake by Winston Churchill to encourage the premature return of King George.

Up to now King Paul has not offended the republicans, as did his brother. Perhaps a state of toleration of the present situation could be attained if the King promised to be a no-party man, but no more than toleration.

Some kind of armistice would have to be made between the opposing camps. It would be wrong to call them right and left. The republican leaders, General Plastiras and Themistocles Sophoulis, are as anti-Communist as the average Southern Democrat at home. But the Communists live by exploiting the older cleavage. If our mission can bridge this over, it will bring Greece toward a constructive solution.

Some Papers Inject Tariff Issue

Europe Hails Marshall's Speech

WESTERN Europe has been quick to see the importance of Secretary Marshall's speech at Harvard.

Judging from British and French newspaper comment, there has been a friendly but far from unanimous response to the Secretary's idea that America will help if Europe provides programs for its own reconstruction.

Conservative papers in both countries applauded the Secretary without reservation.

In England, the Times, for example, found the Harvard speech "politically courageous as well as economically constructive," and called upon European governments to "show the same sort of courage and imagination in organizing a cooperative response."

The Sunday Observer (conservative) said "somebody in Europe has to take the initiative to see that Europe does not miss this opportunity." The News Chronicle (liberal) called the speech "a challenge to Europe," urged Foreign Secretary Bevin to use the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe, on which Russia is represented, to follow the Marshall lead.

Some Honest Doubts

IN FRANCE all but the pro-Communist newspapers took a similar friendly line. L'Aube, the organ of the M. R. P. Party, called the speech "a real declaration of peace." Le Figaro (conservative) found Secretary Marshall's advice "excellent" and pointing a way toward Europe's salvation. Le Populaire (Socialist) described Marshall's offer as "a most outstanding expression of a desire for peace."

But there were doubts in both countries—some of them honest, non-Communist doubts. In England the Daily Herald, often regarded as the organ of the Labor government, agreed that "great good can come from this policy if it is guided throughout by the principle of world unity"—but it emphasized the need of including Russia.

"If the American Administration's plans are to advance the promotion of enduring peace," said the Herald, "they must raise no barrier to close collaboration between eastern and western Europe." The Manchester Guardian (liberal) also argued that the plan would fail if limited to western Europe.

Clouded by Tariff

STILL OTHER doubts in England reflected suspicion of American high-tariff policies in Congress. The Sunday Times (conservative) warned that "American protectionism is ever ready to stab American internationalism in the back."

Lord Beaverbrook's Daily Express, which still stands for empire tariff preferences, said everything Marshall was urging on Europe was being "frustrated and impeded by the commercial policy of his own Government."

The Communists in both countries had no doubts whatever; they found the plan evil, and would have none of it.

In London the Daily Worker described it as a scheme for "American domination" of a western bloc in Europe. In Paris, L'Humanite (Communist) called it "an extension of the Truman interventionist policy, and a perfect tool for the development of Wall Street domination of Europe."

The 'Hidden' Powers of the Taft-Hartley Bill

9. Discharge "for Cause." No employer need reinstate, nor pay back wages, to a worker whom he has fired "for cause."

* * * * *

The NLRB has held to this policy, provided that the firing was really "for cause" and not for union activity. But the way in which this right has been written into the new bill suggests that the employer may be able to practice anti-union subterfuges more easily.

The bill appears to say that if the employer fires a worker for union activity, but contends that the discharge was for cause, and is able to show that the worker committed some infraction of the rules, or is able to find some other charge against him—both things easy to do—the discharged worker has no recourse.

Union sources feel that this provision nullifies the Wagner Act protection against discriminatory firings.

The provision makes no change in existing law. It simply makes it mandatory on the NLRB to continue to recognize bona fide firings for cause. It does not permit "pretext" discharges.

As the report of the House managers of the bill makes clear, the provision was inserted to prevent recurrences of a situation such as that in the Wyman-Gordon case. There a Circuit Court of Appeals held that a majority of the NLRB had ignored a true defense that a worker had been discharged for cause.

10. "Severance Out" of Craft Units. If a majority of any true craft in a plant votes to be represented separately in collective bargaining, the NLRB must certify its union as its bargaining agent.

* * * *

For more than a decade, the NLRB has busied itself with determining, for each individual case, what union—whether craft or industrial (plant-wide)—is the proper bargaining agent. The new provision removes much of the NLRB's discretion.

Whatever the NLRB's ideas on how worker democracy and collective bargaining are best served, any craft group, by majority vote, can sever itself out of a plant-wide union and bargain for itself.

This is considered certain to upset a great number of longstanding and successful bargaining relationships in big American industries. As might be expected, because of the difference in the organizational basis of their unions, the AFL favors the provision for the most part and the CIO objects to it bitterly.

The provision restores an NLRB interpretation applied to this section some years ago during the chairmanship of J. Warren Madden. It abrogates a subsequent rule that once a determination is made regarding the proper bargaining unit for a company, that decision holds forever.

It still leaves the NLRB free to use other tests as to the appropriateness of a bargaining unit in craft vs. plant-wide controversies.

11. Free Speech. No expression of views, argument or opinion may be used as evidence of an unfair labor practice if it contains no threat or promise of benefit.

* * * *

The purpose of this provision is to prevent an employer's remarks, providing they are not threatening to the union, from constituting in themselves an unfair labor practice. But its effect is to bar those remarks from being used as evidence, showing motive, in connection with some other unfair labor practice charge.

Thus, if an employer declares that he objects to John Doe because of his union activities, and next day fires John Doe, the NLRB cannot use the employer's hostile remark as evidence of motive in determining whether the firing was an unfair labor practice.

This accords an employer greater protection than he would have in a court of law. There, if a man were on trial for murder, his previous expressions of hostility to the victim could be used as part of a chain of evidence to demonstrate motive for the murder.

The argument in the opposite column ignores the fact that all that is prevented from being used as evidence are "views, argument or opinion" It does not exclude other statements, directions or instructions that an employer may issue.

The NLRB and the courts may still decide—as is proper—where opinion stops and where a reflection of intent begins. A reflection of intent would be admissible as evidence in an unfair labor practice case, it is believed.

Even in a murder case, an expression of political views or opinion, however hostile, would be inadmissable as evidence.

OBSTACLES TO UNION OPERATION

12. Communist Officers. The NLRB cannot certify or handle the case of any union until there is filed with it an affidavit from every officer of the local union, and of its parent organization, certifying that he is not a Communist, Communist sympathizer or supporter of an organization which believes in the overthrow of the Government by force or illegal means.

* * * *

The effect of this provision is that a union with one or more Communist officers will be stopped from all operations until it can purge itself. Desirable as this result may be, it may have disastrous results on precisely those unions which are fighting hardest to rid themselves of Communist officers.

While they are engaged in a factional fight, trying to oust the Communist gang, the non-Communist leaders are exposed to employer attack. They cannot carry on bargaining relations which would strengthen them and therefore help accomplish the very aim sought by this provision.

The case of Walter Reuther, vigorously anti-Communist president of the CIO auto workers, is in point. Until he can get rid of Communist factions in his union—a very diffcult thing to do—General Motors, which loses no love on him, can refuse to bargain with him, thus virtually destroying his power in the union.

One reason why anti-Communists have such difficulty in obtaining, by democratic methods, the ouster of Communists is that the latter rarely admit their affiliation or beliefs. If they now refuse to execute an affidavit, the rank and file would have a clean-cut issue on which to make a choice in a factional dispute.

This sort of situation is particularly applicable to the CIO auto workers.

If a Communist officer makes a false oath in his affidavit, the risk of penalty is on him alone; the union, meantime, is free to go ahead with its collective bargaining processes.

13. Registration Statements. The NLRB cannot certify a union, or handle a case for it, until the union can show that it has filed with the Secretary of Labor a very detailed set of financial and organizational statements and has furnished copies of them to each of its members.

* * * *

The statements and their filing with the Labor Department are not particularly onerous requirements, since many unions already prepare such documents. But it will probably always be possible for an employer who does not wish to bargain with the union to show that some one of a union's many thousands of members has failed to receive copies of the reports. The provision would permit endless delay and disruption of collective bargaining as long as any employer wanted such delay and disruption.

Presumably the statements would be printed in quantity. A good faith failure to send a copy to a member would easily and quickly be corrected. If an employer should resort to this kind of dilatory tactics, the union need only give a copy of its report to each member whom the employer produces with the claim that he did not get a copy.

14. "Step by Step" Organization. In deciding what unit is appropriate for collective bargaining, the NLRB may not consider as the controlling factor the extent of union organization.

* * * *

It has been NLRB practice to grant certification to a group, representing a reasonably recognizable and appropriate subdivision or branch office of a Nation-wide company, which was organized and ready to bargain responsibly. This permitted bargaining to begin for segments of employes where otherwise it might have been prevented, or long delayed, while awaiting the complete organization of the whole enterprise.

The new provision appears to forbid such certification of smaller units, one by one, as they become organized. This is in remarkable contrast to several other sections of the bill which encourage smaller units and discourage larger ones. Note, for example, the craft union provision, No. 10 above. Similarly, the bill encourages separate organization of professional employes and permits guards to bargain only if they are in a union distinct from that of the rank and file.

The provision does not prevent the NLRB from saying that it is not necessary to organize an entire company system, if a particular plant or office is an appropriate bargaining unit by itself.

The purpose of the language is to prevent the NLRB from falling back upon the "extent of organization" theory as the justifying factor when all other tests show that the unit is so fragmentary that it is clearly not appropriate.

Since 1944 the NLRB has abandoned the "extent of organization" doctrine as the sole test.

(The pros and cons of four other important provisions of the Taft-Hartley bill will be presented in tomorrow's Washington Post).

operations of the State Department. This is not their job. and it will be the death of their group if they attempt it.

Let them initial a single cable going to an embassy abroad, and they will have strayed from their assignment. When they make a recommendation, it is their job to pass it on to the new Undersecretary, Robert A. Lovett, and through him to Secretary Marshall. It is no part of their job to see that the recommendation is carried out by the department.

At least it speaks well for Kennan and his group, and for the wise use of them being made by Marshall, that up to now they have not tried to wander afield.

An Opposite Peril

THE second danger that faces them is that they may shut themselves into an ivory tower, cut off from the stream of activity in the department as a whole. This is unlikely at present, partly because Kennan and his colleagues are old State Department hands, on terms of personal friendship with most of the top officials who have to do the everyday work.

The third danger is that they may become a vested interest in their own right, suspicious of newcomers and hostile to new ideas from the outside. The best protection against this is to bring fresh minds into the policy planning staff from time to time, and to draw on experience and ideas wherever they may be found in the department or elsewhere.

The experience represented in Kennan's group is not yet broad enough to encompass the entire range of State Department activities. It will have to be widened, for the subject matter of American foreign policy is becoming almost as immense as the range of the entire Government.

There can be no single, consistent American foreign policy until there is the equivalent of a Government general staff for foreign affairs. Such a general staff will have to include top officials from the War and Navy Departments, from Agriculture and Commerce, and from other executive agencies that play an important part in determining America's relations with the rest of the world.

The creation of the Kennan group is no answer to this problem, which Secretary Marshall has not yet succeeded in mastering. It is, however, a promising step toward a more consistent and carefully planned State Department policy. Time will tell how it will function, but this much can be said already: that Secretary Marshall has better equipment to deal with a great foreign crisis than any of his modern predecessors.

Looking Ahead

Misplaced Memo on Braden Caused Those Red Faces

A LOST memorandum caused all the red faces over the Braden-Messersmith resignation fumble.

President Truman patched up United States differences with Argentina on June 3. Next step was to be the tactful liquidation of the Braden-Messersmith feud. The resignation of Ambassador George Messersmith was to be announced about June 10, and Assistant Secretary of State Braden's resignation was to be made public June 12, but it happened in reverse order.

Braden had formally submitted his resignation, and when it went to the White House the State Department attached a memorandum saying it should not be given out before June 12. Somehow, the memo got lost.

White House Secretary Charles Ross on June 4 received several inquiries about Braden's status. He found the resignation, and, since no memorandum was with it, he announced it at once.

When President Truman at his news conference next day was questioned about Messersmith's status, the President said the Ambassador's mission in Argentina was finished but that he had not seen his resignation.

Messersmith's resignation, in fact, had not been formally submitted. But the State Department, highly embarrassed by then, prevailed on the White House to accept it anyway, despite word from Messersmith that he could be useful in Argentina if allowed to remain there a while longer. So late on the day of the President's news conference, June 5, the Ambassador's resignation was announced—not by the President but by the State Department.

The Department acted in a hurry, not only to save Braden further discomfiture but also to check speculation that Braden, a harsh critic of the Peron government, was being let out while Messersmith, more friendly toward Argentina, would continue to influence United States policy.

India Reshuffle

LAKE SUCCESS—Partition of India is expected to produce at least two members of the United Nations where only one exists now. U. N. officials believe Pakistan and Hindustan will apply for separate memberships. And if the reshuffle in India results in independence for the 500-odd princely states, they expect that applications will be received from at least the larger ones, such as Hyderabad, headed by the fabulously rich Nizam.

German Problem

BERLIN—Anglo-American officials are not making any optimistic forecasts for the success of the new German economic council in their zones . . . But they are looking with some hope to the conference of ministers president at Munich, the first such all-German gathering since the war.

Jersey City Mourns 'The Law'

tions as to the source of his wealth. He was upheld by the New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals.

Taxpayers' Tears

MEANWHILE Jersey City's tax rate soared. In 1917 when Hague took office, it was $17 for each $1000 of assessed property valuation. This year it was $72.75, believed to be the highest rate in the United States.

Still a great majority of Hague's constituents obviously have been satisfied to pay what was asked of them. There was a great deal more of genuine sadness over his resignation than of relief. People who have lost property because of inability to meet tax payments, wept when they heard the news.

The general reaction was that he had made Jersey City "a great city." Didn't he give us the City Medical Center, one of the finest in the world? Hasn't Jersey City had the lowest crime rate for a city of its size for years? Isn't it true that we haven't had a bank robbery in 30 years? Is there any such thing as vice in Jersey City? Isn't the A. Harry Moore School for Crippled Children one of the best of its type in the country? Isn't Roosevelt Stadium the best minor baseball league plant in the United States? Isn't our juvenile delinquency program used as a model by hundreds of cities?

The answer to all those questions is largely in Hague's favor.

His Border Patrol

WHEN prohibition crime was rampant across the river in New York, hoodlums sought refuge in Jersey City. Hague put an end to that. Police squads patrolled every highway into the city, stopping automobiles, searching occupants and piling up arrests. The beer barons and gunmen were soon discouraged.

Roosevelt Stadium was built with the aid of WPA funds and Hague talked the New York Giants into installing a farm club. In return he has supervised fantastic ticket sales.

Tickets for the opening game of each season are handled at City Hall. They can not be purchased elsewhere. Never less than 50,000 and as many at 62,000 tickets have been sold for that one game in a stadium seating 24,500. All proceeds go to the baseball club, which then is able to start the season in the black.

There has never been a satisfactory explanation of what becomes of the 30,000 or so surplus tickets. One version is that city employes, other individuals and corporations indebted to Hague are asked to buy blocks of tickets. At any rate, many sports promoters have expressed the wish that there were more Frank Hagues around.

Edison and Edge

IN RECENT years Hague has had Governor trouble. First it was Edison, whom Hague backed in 1940 but who repudiated the support in his campaign. The following year Governor Edison appointed to the State Supreme Court a man who had vigorously opposed the selection of Hague's son, Frank, jr., for the Court of Errors and Appeals. At the time of young Hague's appointment to the State's highest court by Gov. A. Harry Moore, the latter said he thought it "would please the boy's dad."

Then Edison aroused Hague's militant wrath by putting through the Legislature a series of compromise railroad tax bills. The mayor went to court, and after long and costly litigation the bills were ruled unconstitutional.

Hague was to beat Edison again and again. As recently as 1942 the late President Roosevelt appointed Thomas F. Meaney a United States District Court judge over Edison's protests.

Republican Gov. Walter E. Edge took up against Hague where Edison left off. He sent his Attorney General to Hudson County to raid gambling places and put through legislation for the installation of voting machines in the mayor's home county. Hague prefers the written ballot.

As early as 1919 Hague had begun to make his strength felt nationally. He was elected Democratic National Committeeman that year and five years later became vice chairman. He sided with Al Smith in the 1924, 1928 and 1932 national conventions, but broke with Smith when the latter "took a walk" in 1936.

Hague backed Smith's "stop Roosevelt" movement in Chicago in 1932, but when the fight was lost he endorsed the nominee and carried New Jersey for him by 30,000 votes. Four years later he kept his State in the Roosevelt column by a plurality of 364,000.

Pious and Profane

A DOUR man whose grammar is as sloppy as his dress is meticulous, Hague's speeches are delivered with piety and feeling, punctuated by a whacking of his palms together. In conversation he can be profane and tough, and has a habit of jabbing a forefinger at his listener's chest and saying, "You know I'm right."

Right or wrong, those who have openly opposed him have seldom fared well. The Hudson County newspapers either supported him or left him alone after The Jersey Journal tried opposition in 1929 and was nearly wrecked.

Hague also has a knack of getting critics to see things his way by bringing them into the fold. T. James Tumulty, a young lawyer and a brilliant orator, is an example.

For several years the weighty frame of Tumulty was familiar on anti-Hague platforms and at City Hall protest meetings. On one occasion he was "forcibly ejected" from the City Hall chambers.

Suddenly Tumulty was appointed an assistant corporation counsel for Jersey City. He was subsequently elected an assemblyman and today is regarded as a certain congressional candidate in the future. He has been Hague's whip at Trenton on many important issues.

U. S. School Aid Bill In Best Position Yet For Capitol Passage

they are as citizens, as workers, and as individual human beings.

"Their resentment is deep, active and dangerous to the national stability. The psychology of these people must be faced.

"It is a fact to be ignored only at our peril, for communism and fascism are both based upon the ignorance of the people whom they seek to victimize.

"If we wish to head off fascism, communism and socialism, we must at once strengthen the democratic structure as we know it by increasing the educational outlets of our backward areas, and by improving those in every section of the country."

Mrs. Meyer emphasized the wide gap between the excellent schools in the cities and the very poor ones in small towns, rural areas and less prosperous States, by declaring that "real equality of educational opportunity will take generations to achieve."

The McCowen bill, she said, "makes a very modest, really, only an experimental beginning, toward realization of educational opportunity through Federal aid."

Child Is Indivisible

MRS. MEYER boldly met one point of opposition to the bill, that involving parochial schools. Both the House measure and S-472, the Senate measure approved by the subcommittee last week, permit assistance to nonpublic, tax-exempt schools in States where such assistance has been customary.

Preambles of both bills state that they are bills in aid of public schools. They also state that no Federal officer shall exercise control.

"The administrative independence of State education must remain a primary concern," Mrs. Meyer said. "The whole problem of public assistance to nonpublic schools is a question for decision within the States.

"I submit the principle that all children, regardless of what school they attend, are eligible for such public health, nutrition and other welfare provisions such as transportation as the local communities may provide, in all States where the expenditure of public funds for nonpublic schools is not legally prohibited by State constitution.

"These local public welfare provisions would constitute a service to the child and not to the public schools.

"The State has no responsibility to support nonpublic schools. But in a democracy the State must extend its public welfare services to all children alike, regardless of race, color or creed.

"If the local community receives State or Federal aid for such public services, these funds should be paid to the local government, not to the parochial schools, in order to avoid all fiscal relations between church and state.

"Surely no humane person would maintain that a hungry child should not receive a hot midday meal because it is a Catholic.

"Nobody should countenance, as has happened, that a school bus driver should pick up some youngsters and be obliged to leave parochial school pupils stranded in deep snow.

"Likewise, if the local public health department is examining school children for tuberculosis, it would be monstrous and self-defeating to omit parochial school children from a preventive program."

Catholics Set Example

MRS. MEYER referred to the change in position towards the bill of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, from "its historical position of opposition to all Federal aid unless the parochial schools receive a proportionate amount."

"The conference now favors Federal aid as a corrective measure for the educational deficiencies in States lacking sufficient taxable resources to provide an adequate education for every child.

"That constitutes a noteworthy change of policy.

"If, in turn, the Protestants would also modify their historical position to this extent—that there should be no Federal aid to parochial school systems as such but that all available local public services for health, nutrition, welfare and transportation shall go to all children regardless of creed, color, or what schools they attend—a principle would be established that might eliminate one of the greatest traditional hindrances to Federal aid for education."

Norton's Summary

A STATEMENT embracing all the arguments in behalf of the bill was presented by John K. Norton, professor of education at Teachers College, Columbia University.

Supported by voluminous charts, Dr. Norton covered the entire field of the proposed measure.

Summarized, Dr. Norton's arguments fell under the following headings, in themselves explanatory:

(1) There should be Federal aid for education because denial of educational opportunity and gross inequality of educational opportunity are far too prevalent in the United States.

(2) There should be Federal aid for education because the gross inequalities in educational opportunity which exist today are primarily due to similar inequalities in the financial support of education.

(3) There should be Federal aid for education because the social ills which result from denying schooling to millions endanger the whole Nation.

(4) There should be Federal aid for education because the gross inequalities in the support of schools in the various States can be removed only if aid is provided.

Germans Win A Spare Hour Of Shuteye

BERLIN, June 14 (AP).—The Allied Control Council's coordinating committee has agreed to abolish double summer time in Germany at German request, reverting to single summer (daylight saving) time June 29.

Both the American zone laenderrat (state government) and the Berlin city council had appealed to the Allied control authority to cancel double summer time, put into effect early in May after the British proposed it as a measure to save coal.

Germans contended that the long hours of daylight had further reduced their working efficiency and adversely affected output because they were not able to get proper rest.

In the Ruhr, where food shortages are regarded as the chief cause of reduced coal production, miners complained that in addition they had to go to work tired and only half awake.

Daylight here lasts until after 11 p. m. under Central European double summer time and resumes before 6 a. m. Miners say they have difficulty in getting to sleep before midnight and that they must be up shortly after 4 a. m. to be at work on day shifts at 6.

Some mines, recognizing the problem, enabled workers to get an extra hour of sleep by changing the day shift hours from 7 a. m. to 3 p. m. Instead of the normal 6 to 2.

Teachers also have reported that school children, lacking sleep, show less aptitude in their studies. Small children driven to bed early in the evening sometimes awaken an hour or so later to see the sunlight streaming through the windows and start getting ready for school.

The problem has been accentuated because Germany has had bright days ever since the new time schedule began.

Worsham, Snead Tie for Open Title, 282

Virginians Clash In Playoff Today

Lew Finishes Early, Apparently Winner, But Sam's Long Putt on 72d Squares It

By Gayle Talbot

St. Louis, June 14 (AP).—It took Samuel Jackson Snead eight bitter years to live down the monumental eight strokes he took on the last hole of the National Open championship at Philadelphia in 1939, but the slender fellow from the mountain country finally squared his account with the golfing fates today.

Sam stood on the seventy-second hole at the St. Louis Country Club with a 20-foot, slanting putt staring him in the face, and he stepped up and knocked it surely and squarely into the hole as a steaming crowd of 4000 raised a din that must have lasted nearly five minutes.

That putt, for a birdie three on the final hole of the 1947 championship, meant that Sam had won all the vindication he ever would need, and that he would meet Lew Worsham, a Washington, D. C., boy and comparative newcomer to golfing's glamour ranks, in an 18-hole playoff tomorrow for the most prized of native links crowns.

It's a Great Day for Virginia

It was a great day for Virginia in St. Louis yesterday as two of the Old Dominion's sons tied for the National Open championship.

Sammy Snead is a native of Hot Springs. He was born there May 27, 1914, and has lived there ever since.

Lew Worsham first saw the light of day in Pittsylvania County, near Lynchburg, on October 5, 1917. His family moved to Hampton, Va., when Lew was but five months old and took up residence in Washington in 1922. The Worshams returned to Virginia during the depression years, but came back to the District area later and now reside in Montgomery County.

Worsham, leader by a stroke at the 54-hole mark, had finished well ahead of Snead with his second par-71 score of the day and a total of 282 shots for the route.

Sam needed a sub-par 70—also his second of the day—to tie Worsham, and he got it. He brought about the fourth playoff in the last five open championships.

A Chance for Sammy to Wrap Up World's Championship

Already holder of the British Open title he won last year at St. Andrews, Snead will have his chance tomorrow to wrap up what amounts to the world championship. He was favored tonight to win the playoff, but there was no disposition to underrate Worsham, a 29-year-old former Navy man who recently signed at the famous Oakmont, Pa., club.

Worsham, in his three-day drive to the top, shot rounds of 70-70-71-71.

Snead, who only a few weeks ago was threatening to quit the game unless he got over the "putting jerks," started with a 72 and then blazed away with 70-70-70. Each missed by a stroke tying the Open record of 281 blows set by Ralph Guldahl in 1937.

Worsham, with a clean victory beckoning him, went over par on two of the final four holes to give Snead the chance which Sammy grasped. A simple par either on the sixty-ninth or the seventy-first holes would have given him the title, but on each he faltered, hitting a sand trap on 69 and the rough on 71.

Sam over the same crucial four-hole stretch, collected two birdies and caught the former Washington, D. C., caddie.

The pair finished a clean three strokes ahead of their nearest pursuers, Bobby Locke, the South African star, and Ed (Porky) Oliver of Wilmington, Del. They tied at 285 after Locke, who started the final round only a stroke off the pace, came apart surprisingly toward the end and wound up with a fat 73. Oliver finished with his second 71 of the day.

For more than an hour after Worsham and Snead had putted out, the huge gallery followed Locke, knowing that the be-knickered foreigner had a good chance of winning it by himself. He went out smoothly in 34, but his magic putter finally deserted him on the way back and he flew to 39.

Strangely enough, the day's most electrifying golf was shot by a man who owned only a passing interest in the championship itself, Jimmy McHale, an amateur from Philadelphia and half as large as a house, set the galleries singing in the morning with a sensational round of 65 that broke practically every record in the book.

The former parachute trooper went out in 30 strokes, the lowest nine-hole score in the 47-year history of the open, and then he came back in 35, barely missing a 10-foot putt on the last green that would have given him a 64.

When he was advised a few minutes later that he had made a little golfing history, he exclaimed "no fooling, was that a record?"

McHale's Record 65 Upsets Him and He Soars to 77

Apparently the knowledge shook the big man, for he took 77 blows to go around in the afternoon—a diqerence of only a dozen—and rang up a final score of 293.

But for 18 holes the insurance man from the Quaker City had been without much doubt the greatest golfer in the world.

Locke, shortly after fizzling out on his final round, disclosed that he had decided to stay in this country and play both in the Professional Golfers' Association championship next week in Detroit and in the Tam O'Shanter tournament at Chicago July 3-6.

He originally had planned to fly to England next week to practice for the British open at Hoylake, but he was understood to have changed his mind after receiving a guarantee of $3000 to $4000 to play in the Tam O'Shanter. Top prize in the Tam is $6,390.

Locke's 73 on his final round today was only his second over-par score in his last 32 rounds in this country.

Charles (Chick) Harbert, the young Detroit professional, had one of the day's most heart-breaking blow-ups on his third round. Starting the day tied for the leadership with Dick Metz at 139, Harbert shot himself a shocking 81 to pass out of the picture. He came back in the afternoon, however, with a fine 70 to post a total of 290. But for that one horrendous round, it might all have been his.

Metz blew nearly as high on his third round, taking a 78 under the pressure. He scored a 74 in the afternoon and finished in a tie with five others at 291. One of them was Frank Stranahan of Toledo, who grabbed second amateur honors, for whatever that is worth.

Lloyd Mangrum, who won the title a year ago at Cleveland, found the country club fairways much too narrow and posted a four-round total of 293.

The final standing tonight was strung out in unusual fashion. After the first four—Worsham, Snead, Oliver and Locke—there was a two-stroke gap to the next finisher, Marvin (Bud) Ward of Spokane, Wash., who easily led the amateurs with a total of 287.

Then there was another two-stroke jump to the next six, Vic Ghezzi, Ben Hogan, Jim Ferrier, Paul Runyan, Leland Gibson and Johnny Palmer, at 289.

To Whom it May Concern:

CLARK GRIFFITH attempted to do business with the Yankees this weekend, before today's deadline on trades, and batted .000. He sent Joe Cambria, Washington scout, to New York to interview Manager Bucky Harris in a quest for Johnny Lindell, Yankee outfielder . . . Cambria retreated in haste when Harris asked for Pitchers Sid Hudson and Early Wynn in a swap for Lindell and Pitcher Floyd Bevens . . . In the same year that Babe Didrikson won three Olmpic track titles, she also won a prize at the Texas State Fair for designing the best box-pleated dress, whatever that is . . . The Nats won't share their Orlando, Fla., training camp with the Pittsburgh Pirates next spring, as had been presumed. The Pirates announced they are pulling out to California after some disgust with the high prices in Florida . . . Two former Nats traded to the Athletics last winter are leading that club in hitting—George Binks (.287) and Mike Guerra (.286) . . . Bobby Locke, the South Africa pro who looks older than his 29 years, now confirms his age to skeptical Americans by hauling a 12-year-old clipping from his pocket describing him as a 17-year-old wonder who won a South African tournament in 1935.

SAM BREADON'S announcement that he has "temporarily" abandoned plans to sell his Cardinals does not sound very convincing . . . In the event that the club is bought by the syndicate headed by Democratic Committee Chairman Bob Hannegan, the Cardinals would boast a nonsmoking club president . . . Last week's "discovery" that Joe DiMaggio has changed to a lighter, 36-ounce bat, is six years too late to be news. DiMaggio threw away his 42-ounce bat in 1941 . . . Wilbur Wood of the New York Sun, in a survey of major league batting averages for 1946, reports that left-handed batters averaged 18 points better than right handers, and averaged one home run in every 46 times at bat, against right-handed homers once in every 61 trips to the plate . . . Chick Harbert, who is the longest-hitting golfer in the world if Jimmy Thomson isn't, carries only two wooden clubs in his bag—a driver and No. 3 wood, no brassie . . . The Boston Braves are among the top clubs in home attendance, showing an average of 17,000 customers per game to date . . . Ossie Bluege has an understandable rooting interest in the Nats. He's on the last year of his current contract and is interested in a renewal.

JEFF HEATH of the Browns was heaved out of the game the other night at Yankee Stadium by Umpire Art Passarella for cussing, which recalls the day last season that Ki Aldrich, Redskin center, was banished by the referee . . . Returning to the Redskin bench, Aldrich denied that he called the referee names, explaining, "I was just cussing the situation in general" . . . Charley Keller, out of the Yankees lineup for a week with a mysterious back ailment, complains there is no pain when he swings a bat, only when he tries to run . . . When Tony Pellone the other night stopped the 48-fight winning streak of Charley Fusari, it was recalled that Ray Robinson once won 41 fights in a row and Henry Armstrong racked up 46 before he lost the lightweight title to Lou Ambers . . . Abe Simon, former 260-pound heavyweight who was on Joe Louis' bum-of-the-month parade, has qualified for a referee's license in New York . . . Bobby Locke's 36 putts in the second round of the National Open when he soared to a 74, represented his worst putting since he came to America . . . Clark Griffith says Mickey Vernon won't cure his batting slump until he is content with meeting the ball instead of trying to place his hits.

WHEN THE CUBS beat the Phillies the other night for the eighth successive time this year, it marked the Phils' seventh one-run loss to the Cubs . . . Marcell Boussac, top turfman, has entered his 3-year-old, Djelal, in the $100,000 International Gold Cup race at Belmont on July 19, and then plans to ship the horse to Brazil for a $50,000 Grand Prix race on August 3 . . . The chief uncertainty of the Redskins is the caliber of their ends, and reserve quarterbacks. Jimmy Youell, the chief replacement for Sammy Baugh, will run the team in most of its exhibition games . . . The Pirates had their starting pitchers knocked out of the box in 15 straight games before Rip Sewell went the route the other night, and lost . . . You can get 5 to 1 that Johnny Mize won't break Babe Ruth's record of 60 home runs in a single season . . . If Governor Dewey is the next occupant of the White House, golf will supplant horseshoe pitching as the favorite presidential sport, harking back to the late Warren G. Harding, most famous of the golfing Presidents . . . Harding was also the only President who could correctly keep a baseball box score, and he was not above betting a fin on the Washington club when he went to Griffith Stadium.

Masterson, Newhouser Duel Today

By Al Costello
Post Reporter

Rained out again yesterday, the Nats and Detroit Tigers tangle in a doubleheader today, 1:30 p. m. with one of the brightest hurling duels of the season in store.

In the first game, the Nats will take dead aim on Hal Newhouser, the Tigers' great southpaw who has a habit of whipping the Nats with regularity and ease.

Against the fireballing southpaw, Manager Ossie Bluege will throw Walter Masterson, hero of last Sunday's thrilling 1-0 victory in 18 innings over the Chicgo White Sox.

16 Innings Against Sox

The bespectacled Masterson, who has pitched consistently good ball this year with a record of four victories and three defeats, hurled 16 innings of six-hit ball at the Chisox last week. Early Wynn came in to fling the final two innings and received credit for the triumph.

In choosing Masterson to oppose the Tigers' southsider, Bluege is countering with the fellow he is convinced has finally arrived as a star.

Equipped with a sizzling fast ball, a good curve and a half-speed wrinkler, Masterson apparently has mastered the one thing that prevented him from rising to stardom years ago—control.

In his 16-inning effort against the Chisox last week, Walter walked six men. Three were intentional.

Masterson, only 27, came to the Nats when he was 18. He has been with them ever since, except for three years in the Navy.

Strangely enough, Masterson, in nearly six full seasons, never has won over five games per season. This year he appears to be a cinch to wind up the season with double figures in the win column.

In the second game today, Mickey Haefner, bothered with a badly abscessed ear all spring, will go after his second victory against five defeats. His opponent will be Frank "Stubby" Overmire, a southpaw whom the Nats used to view with great delight.

Bobo Newsom, originally scheduled to pitch Friday night's postponed game and again yesterday, will be held over for Tuesday night when the Nats meet the Cleveland Indians here under the lights.

Mama, Papa Worsham Have Bad Time When Snead Putts

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

"THIS is a tense moment, Mama," said Papa Worsham as he nervously fingered his dial on the radio.

"Snead has got to sink this to tie Lewie . . . did you hear what the man said? Lewis is sitting around the green watching it. I wonder what Lewis is thinking about."

Papa Worsham—Lewis Elmer Worsham, sr., then crossed his fingers and waited. There was nothing else he could do. His son, Lew, was already in with 282 and Sammy Snead had to drop a 12-footer on the seventy-second hole to tie Lew for the National Open championship out in St. Louis.

The Worshams, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis E. Worsham, sr.; Lew's sister, Mrs. Uva Mae Cable; two brothers, Bubby and Walter; and Lew's 7-year-old daughter, Linda, were all ears. Even Rickey, Lew's 8-month-old son, seemed to sense the importance of the moment as he quieted his little rattle and gazed smilingly into the radio.

"Snead putted . . . it's going for the cup . . . it's in!" said

Cubs Whip Into League Lead, Beat Phils, 6-3, as Giants Lose

Cincinnati, June 14 (AP).—The Cincinnati Reds dumped the Giants out of the National League lead today by defeating the New Yorkers 4-3 behind the eight-hit pitching of Ewell Blackwell.

The defeat together with the Chicago Cubs ninth straight victory over the Philadelphia Phillies dropped the Giants into second place, a half game behind the Cubs.

It was victory number nine for Blackwell, who has lost only twice this season. The lanky sidearmer fanned six to raise his league leading strikeout to 65.

Chicago, June 14 (AP).—The Chicago Cubs beat Philadelphia 6 to 3 today for their fifth straight victory and ninth in a row this season over the Phillies, and moved into first place in the National League as the New York Giants dropped to second by losing at Cincinnati, 4 to 3.

The Cubs pounded Emil (Dutch) Leonard for eight hits, including two homers and three doubles. Eddie Waitkus and Marv Rickert smashed out the homers, each coming with one aboard. It was Leonard's third defeat against seven victories.

Chisox Trade Jones to Bosox For Rudy York

Boston, June 14 (AP).—The even swap of First Baseman Rudy York and Murrell Jones of the Chicago White Sox was announced today by the Boston Red Sox. They will play with their new clubs here tomorrow in a double-header.

York, who helped spark the Red Sox to the 1946 pennant by hitting .276, now is batting .212. Jones' current batting average is .236.

York came to the Red Sox from Detroit on January 3, 1946, in exchange for Addie Lake. Early last season Jones, in a collision with Lake, received a fractured left elbow and remained out of action until this year.

York, now 33, broke in with the Tigers in 1934 as a catcher and also performed at third base and in the outfield before being converted into a first baseman in 1940.

Jones, who is seven years younger than York, first joined the White Sox in 1941 and then served three years in the Navy as a fighter pilot.

Raffensberger Traded To Reds for Lakeman

Philadelphia, June 14 (AP)—The Philadelphia Phillies today announced the trading of southpaw Ken Raffensberger and catcher Hugh Poland to the Cincinnati Reds for catcher Albert Lakeman. No cash was involved.

Raffensberger has a record of two victories and six defeats this season. Poland has seen little service behind the plate.

—A Golfing Hybrid Goes Wild—

Jim McHale Shatters Open Records With 65

By Davis J. Walsh

Here's McHale's Remarkable Score

Par Out ...423 454 345—35 Par In...443 545 344—36—71
McHale ....332 443 245—30 McHale..443 544 344—35—65

CLAYTON, Mo., June 14 (INS). Jim McHale, a hybrid of the links from Philadelphia, went stark mad with a 30-35—65 today to wipe out everything on the record books of the National Open golf championship.

The 30 for the first nine snipped one stroke from the best of all the half-rounds shot in this championship since away back in the frivolous 90s. The best previously had been the 31s of Bobby Jones in 1929 and Hanry Ransom, Chicago, in 1941.

The 65 snuffed out all those record 66s, made in moments of sheer inspiration by the likes of Gene Sarazen, Walter Hagen and a few more of that ilk.

Yet it was done by a virtual nobody of the National scene, a slim dark gent with a crew haircut and impeccable manners whose fame hadn't previously spread beyond Chestnut Hill in suburban Philadelphia.

There was one other strange detail connected with this man McHale, nay two; he had started off as an amateur, first of all, turned pro and then, for reasons that must have seemed ample and conclusive, he decided to embrace amateurism all over again.

The second of the young man's idiosyncracies concerns itself with the fact that he stoops over, like a drooping willow, from 6 feet 3 inches, and addresses his irons from right in front of his feet.

Yes, and there's a third item of this piquant list:

Today, his name and feat were in nomination for posterity. Yesterday, he barely qualified, just making the deadline at 151 for the first 36 holes.

But right or wrong about all that, Jim McHale, the listed amateur who once worked in Craig Wood's "shop" at Winged Foot, shot better scoreboard golf today than all the great men of all the years ever were able to do before.

McHale had a thin share of the gallery on his fine first nine, but the crowd gathered on the back row. There his putter cooled off a bit, but he parred eight holes and had a birdie four on the 500-yard fifteenth.

McHale is a 31-year-old insurance broker. He can point back eight years to an even more remarkable round of golf than he played today, a 61 he shot at Philadelphia in 1939, but his demonstration under the white heat competition of the Open was the best 18-hole round in 47 versions of this classic.

McHale's sizzling round shaved five strokes off par 35 on the opening nine. He dropped five birdies, three of them in succession over the stubborn fifth, sixth and seventh holes.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

International News Service Staff Writer

CLARK GRIFFITH, who recently conceded last year's American League pennant to Boston, is justly proud these days of a couple of big league managers he raised from pups—Joe Cronin and Bucky Harris.

CONSIDINE

"Looks like Joe and Bucky will fight it out right down to the finish line this year," the old gentleman said. "They've got good ball clubs and they know how to handle them. It's going to be quite a thing, seeing two of my boys finishing one-two in the race for runner-up in the American League."

"Runnner-up?" I inquired.

"I think we'll win it," Griff said. "Of course, were's in last place at the moment, but we're only six or seven games off the pace."

An aide patted the old gentleman on the hand, soothingly, and steered him back to the topic of Harris and Cronin, top managers now of the two biggest baseball empires of them all, but once upon a time the bleakest unknown working for Griff.

"First time I saw Bucky he was a tough kid playing for a Baltimore shipyard team during the other war," Griff remembered. "I put him away in the back of my mind and the next time I found him he was playing second base for Buffalo.

"I WENT UP TO BUFFALO from New York, during an off day, and watched him play a game. It wasn't hard coming to terms. I bought him for $2500. He reported to Washington with a broken finger, but was so anxious to make good he played a couple of games before he let anybody know about it."

(P. S.—Griff made Harris baseball's youngest manager in 1924; Bucky won Washington's first pennant, repeated in 1925, made a fortune for Griff, did okay for himself.)

"As for Cronin, he cost me $7500," Griff continued.

"Pittsburgh had him first and gave up on him. He was at Kansas City before our scout, Joe Engel, caught up with him. Kansas City was just about to let him go to Wichita when we went for the $7500, which seemed high at the time."

(P. S.—Cronin became baseball's greatest shortstop, one of its ablest clutch hitters, won Griff his last pennant, in 1933, and was sold to the Red Sox for $250,000 plus Lyn Lary.)

Griff's aging prodigies, Joe and Bucky, have crossed paths several times, and there are those in baseball who try to tell you that there is no great love between them.

Harris thought he was set for life with the Red Sox in 1934, when he led a bad team to the first division. But Joe succeeded him the following season, and Harris dropped back to Washington.

AFTER AN UNHAPPY TIME with Washington and then the Phillies, Bucky was set to take over as general manager of the Tigers—one of the plushiest jobs in baseball. But the premature publication of the story caused testy old Walter O. Briggs, sr., to hit the ceiling, and Bucky lost out.

He fell back into the International League as Buffalo manager, latched onto the Yanks last year as a sort of official witness of the managerial program being conducted by Larry MacPhail, and to everybody's surprise, mostly his own, was made manager of the once incomparable Yanks.

Harris patently has the tougher assignment this season. In any managerial contest with Cronin, Bucky can depend on no consistent behavior on the part of his front office; Cronin can.

As for the clubs, the champion Sox and the resurgent Yanks appear evenly matched, and each of Griff's old Boy Wonders plainly would rather win from the other than from any other pilot in the majors.

"I'm proud of both my boys," old Griff mused. "They prove my point; that the good ones in baseball come cheap."

FIRST PRIZE OF $2000 for winning the world's greatest golf tournament, the U. S. Open, appears astonishingly inadequate in these days of digits followed by infantry columns of ciphers.

But it is only a beginning. The new Open champion will make perhaps $50,000 out of the title. If he is even moderately colorful, his fee for exhibitions jumps 10 or 20 times over his former charges.

The equipment company which retains him is good for a big bonus and a hike in the retainer fee.

If he is attached to a small club, a big one will want him and pay him handsomely for coming.

So you never hear a squawk from the winner of the Open when he is presented with a check which would bring a howl of rage from any other type of pro athlete who had finally achieved the greatest pinnacle in his branch of athletics.

Nelson Picks Snead to Beat Worsham for Title Today

By Byron Nelson

(Written for the Associated Press)

St. Louis, June 14 (AP).—A veteran and a dangerous newcomer will battle it out for the title tomorrow in another playoff finish of the United States Open Golf tournament and it looks like the veteran—Slammin' Sammy Snead, will cop this one.

It's hard to choose against Lew Worsham, who played beautifully throughout the entire 72-hole regular competition, but the fact remains that he faltered in the stretch today, while Snead made a dramatic close.

I think that when Snead stroked in that 20-foot putt on the seventy-second hole to tie Worsham, who had finished an hour earlier, he loaded up with just the confidence he'll need in tomorrow's 18-hole showdown.

Remember, Sammy came face-to-face with that crucial test of his putter just after he had fizzled a five-footer trying for a birdie on the seventieth hole and missed a six-footer gunning for a par on the seventy-first.

On the other hand, Lew probably won't soon forget that sixty-ninth green which cost him the title—in today's round at least.

The turning point was his third shot on the par-five hole after he had teed off into the rough and played it safe with a second shot short of some bunkers and 160 yards from the green.

Then trying a No. 5 iron, he hit just a little behind the ball, perhaps one eighth of an inch, and it failed to ride out a cross-wind and veered left into a bunker. I overheard Tommy Armous and Walt Hagen say it was a very costly shot.

Lew's troubles still weren't over. After a fine shot from the bunker to within 5 feet of the cup, he two-putted for a one-over six. On this same hole in his morning 18, Snead bagged a three and several other players had mastered it during the day with birdies.

As I predicted, Ralph Guldahl's National Open record of 281 withstood a great field which found the narrow fairways and stubborn greens a rough assignment for a sustained four-round competition.

Big Alabama 8th Beats Clemson, 8-2

Charlotte, N. C., June 14 (AP).—The University of Alabama's baseball team exploded for five runs in the eighth inning to down Clemson, 8-2, in the first game of a double-header to determine the Southeastern representative to the Eastern NCAA playoffs.

The two clubs immediately entered the second game.

The Alabama team, faced with "sudden death" if it lost the first game, used its ace hurler, Joe Kirkland, to full advantage as the freshman lefthander, benched recently by tonsilitis, let the Tigers down with three scattered hits.

Yanks Batter Browns Back Into Cellar, 12-4

Lindell Clubs Homer, Triple And Double

New York, June 14 (AP).—Belting two pitchers for 13 hits and taking advantage of three miscues which brought them five unearned runs, the New York Yankees moved to within a game of the first place Detroit Tigers with a 12-4 triumph over the St. Louis Browns today before 17,094 fans.

The loss dropped the Browns to the cellar again as the idle Washington Nats moved to seventh.

Every Yankee, except Joe DiMaggio, hit safely with Johnny Lindell, Billy Johnson and Ralph Houk pacing the attack.

Lindell belted a double in the Yankees' four-run first inning, tripled home another marker in the sixth and homered in the eighth.

Jeff Heath hit a two-run homer for the Browns.

Lindell, who has 15 hits in 29 at-bats since substituting for injured Charley Keller, drove in three runs.

Lindell's triple was one of four by the Yanks, Phil Rizzuto, Ralph Houk and Billy Johnson cracking the others. Johnson got three hits and scored four runs.

Col. Matt Winn Ill in Chicago

Chicago, June 14 (AP).—The condition of Col. Matt J. Winn, 85, impresario of the Kentucky Derby for the past 45 years, alarmed its thousands of friends throughout the Nation today.

Colonel Winn, suffering from a severe cold and 102 temperature, was removed from his hotel suite to St. John's Hospital last night, principally as a precautionary measure.

His physician, Dr. Thomas J. Coogan, said Colonel Winn's temperature had returned to normal today and that there were "no findings" of pneumonia as earlier feared.

However, hospital attendants warned that "he is a very elderly man and that caution should prevail in his case. He is resting comfortably, but may not be allowed to leave the hospital for another week."

Winn was in good health and active at the Kentucky Derby last May, but since relinquishing control of his Lincoln Fields course in Chicago, had been an infrequent visitor at the Lincoln Fields meeting now concluding at the Hawthorne Race Track. He sold Lincoln Fields to a crowd of Chicagoans headed by Edward J. Fleming, wealthy coal operator, but continued to manage it.

Climb to Sixth

Cards Smack Bums Twice, 12-2 and 5-3

St. Louis, June 14 (AP).—The St. Louis Cardinals, displaying their strongest batting attack of the season, swept a day-night twin bill from the slumping Brooklyn Dodgers, pounding out a 12 to 2 nocturnal victory after annexing the matinee encounter, 5 to 3.

Harry (the Cat) Brecheen turned in his usual smooth performance in the night affair, scattering seven Dodger hits and blanking them until the ninth.

Alpha Brazle, the wiry lefthander, went all the way for the Redbirds, striking out nine and yielding only seven hits. It was his fifth victory against three losses.

On Trust Wins Rogers 'Cap

Inglewood, Calif., June 14 (AP).—California-bred On Trust captured the $25,000 Will Rogers Handicap at Hollywood Park today over 12 rival 3-year-olds with Handlebars a surprise second and Sullivan third in a hotly contested 7-furlong race before 39,435 fans.

The favored On Trust, taking command in the stretch, had to get up and move to win by a neck as Handlebars, a surprise, came with a rush in the final yards.

The winner paid $3.60, $3.10 and $2.60; Handlebars $10.70 and $5.60, and Sullivan $4.40. The time was 1:22 3-5.

Mamma, Papa Worsham Have Bad Time When Snead Putts

Byron Nelson, describing the dramatic moment over the radio.

There was silence in the Worsham household for a few seconds. Only a few moments ago their hero, 29-year-old Lew, Apparently had become the successor to Lloyd Mangrum as the National Open champion. Now he must turn back the bid of Snead in an 18-hole playoff today.

"Now we'll have to pull him through all over again," said the erect "Papa" Worsham as his clan clearly showed disappointment over Snead's holing out on the home hole.

"Snead sinks a 12-footer, humph!" chimed in 17-year-old Bubby Worsham, winner of The Post's recent schoolboy championship.

"Yeah, ain't it a shame?" said 19-year-old Walter, on leave from the Navy. "And they said Snead couldn't putt."

NATURALLY, the folks felt letdown. But they were calm about it. There was no excitement and there wouldn't have been much if Lew had bagged the title yesterday. They're just plain, homey unexcitable folks who have a great devotion for one another.

Sure, their son is a big figure today. But "he's the same old Lewis," Papa said, "and he'll never change. All of our children are good . . . they never have given us one moment's worry."

Papa sat back in the easy chair of his wooden bungalow at MacArthur blvd. and Wisconsin ave., lit up his pipe and began to recite the history of his eldest son, Lewis Elmer Worsham, jr.

The family knew all of this, but they were attentive and every time Papa mentioned an exploit of Lew's there was that gleam of devotion in their eyes.

* * * *

PAPA, who described himself as "a fellow who's helping to build homes for vets," puffed contentedly. He told how the family—just Papa, Mama and Lew then—moved from Lew's birthplace in Pittsylvania County, Va., near Lynchburg, to Hampton where Papa took a job as a shipyard worker.

Lew was 5 months old then and the family lived in Tidewater Virginia until 1922 when the Worshams moved to Washington.

It was rough going for the Worshams and Lew helped out by caddying at Kenwood. The family moved back to Virginia in the depression years and Lew got his first job in a golf shop, working for Jack Isaacs at the Old Dominion Club.

But the Worshams came back to Washington. Lew by then had become a golf nut. He became Bob Barnett's assistant at Chevy Chase and later got his first job as head pro—at Burning Tree.

He stayed there until he left for the Navy and Papa took over the golf shop while Lew wore the bell-bottoms.

* * * *

"I don't play golf myself," Papa said, "I'm a baseball man. I hit a golf ball once . . . it went through a window of my house, ripped a shade to pieces and imbedded itself in the wall of my living room. Guess I hit the ball pretty hard, at that."

After his release from the Navy, Lew became a tournament player. He tied for the Philly Inquirer Open, but lost a playoff to Herman Barron. He won the Atlanta Druid Hills Open, lost a playoff in Jacksonville to Clayt Heafner, won the Mid-Atlantic PGA and finished in the winner's bracket in every tournament.

But nothing like this—tieing for the U. S. Open championship has ever happened to him.

"We didn't know what we wanted Lewie to do," Mamma said, "but I guess he decided for us when he became so interested in golf."

* * * *

"YOU know, Mr. Loeffler (Ken Loeffler, who operates the public courses in Washington) gave him a new set of clubs when Lew led the Washington boys in the National Caddy Tournament. Until then, Lewie had an old set of clubs, some borrowed. But when Mr. Loeffler gave him those new clubs, well, we knew we had a golfer on our hands.

"Virgil (Buck Worsham, assistant at Winged Foot and who also played in the open this year) followed Lewie and soon enough Walter and Bubber were golfers. Our daughter, Uva Mae, doesn't care for the game as a player. Can't much blame her as all her brothers, and her husband play and all she hears is golf talk. Lew's wife, Virginia, doesn't play either, but she follows him to most of the tournaments."

By this time, the phone rang. It was from the Bannockburn course. Bubber and Walter were getting ready to start the second nine. They were calling to find out about Lew. Lew was in with his 282 and Snead was still out.

"Yeah, looks like Lewie's in the sack," the confident papa told his two youngest sons.

But there was Snead to be reckoned with. The kids rushed home from the course just in time to hear the sad news from St. Louis.

"But don't worry," papa reassured them. "Lewie will win tomorrow. When he gets hot with them sticks, anything can happen."

Today's play-off for the National Open championship will start at 10 a. m., Washington time.

Lentz Gives Doerr a Real Pat on Back

THE REAL REASON WHY Bobby Doerr is back in the line-up for the Boston Red Sox is Dr. George (Bushy) Lentz, Washington club trainer. When the Bosox were in town for the Decoration Day double-header, the Boston trainer brought Doerr into the Washington club house and asked Lentz to take a look at his (Doerr's) ailing back. Lentz examined it, found a sacroiliac condition and treated it. Less than a week later Doerr was back in business at same old second base stand for the American League champions. "Doc" formerly was trainer at George Washington and Catholic Universities and studied two years at the Palmer School of Osteopathy (Davenport, Iowa) to prepare himself as a first-class conditioner of men. He had to be to get the job as successor to Mike Martin, one of the best of all time. Mike now is scouting for the Nats.

Jim Youel, Redskin understudy to Sammy Baugh, is thinking of opening a clothing store in Washington patterned after the one his dad owns in Fort Madison, Iowa. Jim's slogan, like his dad's, will be "Clothes Youel like." . . . Edward B. (Judge) Eynon, secretary of the Washington ball club, is 66 years old. In St. Louis with the ball club Monday he walked 18 holes in the morning and another 18 in the afternoon watching the country's top golf stars tune up for the National Open. He wanted to go another 18, but his companion, 27-year-old Walter Masterson, Nat pitcher, frankly admitted he had enough. Tuesday, Eynon trudged another 36 holes. Wednesday he did it again. A total of 108 holes in three days. You should live so long and be as good a man as 66-year-old "Judge" Eynon.

WHEN BABE DIDRIKSON came to Washington last month to play in The Post's sponsored National Celebrities Tournament, she and Hildegarde, the entertainer, became fast friends. Prior to sailing for England, where she became the first American woman in history to win the British Women's Amateur, she called Hildegarde long distance from the ship's phone aboard the Queen Elizabeth and told her (Hildegarde) she would bring back the silver award. . . . In answer to stories that Doug Turley, Redskin end, is dissatisfied with his contract and would jump to the All-American Conference, it might be interesting news to know that Turley already has signed for '47 with the Redskins.

Alton "Bucky" Buscher, one of the University of Maryland's finest all-around athletes, has submitted his resignation as a member of the District Police Department to enter electrical appliance business with his dad and brother. . . . Rick Ferrell, Nat catcher, is the only member of the first American League All-Star (1933) team still in active harness. . . . Four Redskin rookies are wanted on the College All-Star squad which will meet the champion Chicago Bears in the All-Star classic in Chicago late in August. They are Tommy Mont, University of Maryland quarterback; Bill Gray, Oregon State center; Joe Tereshinski, Georgia end, and Fred Boensch (pronounced "Bunch"), Stanford tackle. All will probably accept with the exception of Mont, who declined with the reason that losing so much time from Redskin drills would hurt his chances of making the club. Silly boy. His only competition is Sammy Baugh and Jim Youel. AL COSTELLO.

W & M Coach Quits For Browns Jobs

Williamsburg, Va., June 14 (AP). Richard F. (Dick) Gallagher, assistant football and head basketball and baseball coach at the College of William and Mary, has resigned to become an assistant coach of the Cleveland Browns of the All-America Conference, Athletic Director R. N. (Rube) McCray announced tonight.

Gallagher formerly coached at Ironton, Ohio, high school. It was while serving in this capacity that he developed a friendship with Paul Brown, head coach at Cleveland, then head coach at Massillon, Ohio.

3 Sessions Planned for Area Kids

The Walter Johnson Memorial Baseball School, which proved so successful in Washington during April and May, will be extended to the nearby counties on June 24.

The counties covered by the school will be Fairfax, Arlington, Alexandria, Prince Georges and Montgomery. There will be five class locations in Fairfax County, three in Alexandria and Montgomery and four each in Arlington and Prince Georges.

Sessions will be held at Recreation Department locations on June 24, 27 and 30. A member of the Washington Nats will instruct each class for the first and last sessions. On the session of June 27, a prominent former big leaguer, will be on hand to demonstrate and lecture on how to play the game.

As in the Washington Johnson School, the conclusion of the three-day course will usher in the beginning of league play for the graduates.

The recreation departments of each of the counties have provided the class locations, and will provide the manpower to conduct the classes and teams.

Plans for the Johnson School in the counties were drawn up at a meeting in The Post's sports department Thursday. Represented were Louis Mitchell of Montgomery, Jim Meade of Prince Georges, W. A. (Buck) Richardson of Arlington, Bob Mavity of Fairfax and Eugene Barnwell of Alexandria.

Presentation of the last few diplomas to the graduates of the Johnson School in Washington had to be postponed yesterday for the second straight week because of the bad weather.

District Recreation Department officials will try again next Saturday to make the presentations. The diplomas will be available at the same locations where the Johnson School held regular classes.

Fairfax County—Fairfax High, Lee hwy.; Mount Vernon High, Route 1, Alexandria; Madison School, Falls Church; Herndon High, Herndon; Falls Church School, Annandale.

Montgomery County—Jesup Blair Park, Georgia ave. and the District Line, Silver Spring; Rock Creek Park, E. Leland and Beach dr., Rock Creek Valley; Bethesda-Chevy Chase High, 4700 Norwood dr., Chevy Chase.

Prince Georges County—Magruder Park, Hyattsville; Greenbelt High, Greenbelt, Md.; Fairmont Heights School, Fairmont Heights, Md.; Marlboro High, Marlboro, Md.

Alexandria—Jefferson Playground; Municipal Stadium; Montgomery Playground.

Arlington County—Washington-Lee High, 13th and N. Stafford sts.; Carlyn Spring rd. and N. Harrison st.; Highway No. 1 and 21st st. South; Green Valley School, Arlington.

'Looks Like Me,' Says Louis of 3-Week-Old Son

Seattle, June 14 (AP).—His deadpan face breaking into a grin, Joe Louis said, "He looks like me, I sure believe he looks like me" at sight today of the first picture of his three-weeks-old son, Joe, jr.

Joe kept looking at a Mexico City Associated Press Wirephoto showing his wife, Marva, cuddling the child as he rode in from the airport. Finally he said, "I guess I'm the happiest guy in the world."

"Looks like he's had a fight already," he added. "Just look at that pug nose."

Then, before heading for a workout for his exhibition boxing match here Tuesday night—a workout on a golf course—Joe told a little more of the Pacific tour he will make this winter, under Manager John Roxborough's direction. The party will include Freddie Sommers, Manny Seamon, Leonard Reed and Freddie Wilson.

The trip will take him to Honolulu, Manila, New Zealand and Australia for appearances in nine cities, before returning to the United States by way of Europe, he said.

Arduini Loses Hawaiian Bout

Honolulu, June 14.—Johnny Arduini, Washington, D. C., flyweight, lost a three-round decision to Yoshi Miyamura, of Hawaii, in the team bouts between the Hawaiians and a U. S. aggregation.

The mainland team won 10 of the 14 opening round bouts against the Hawaiian amateurs.

Derby Winner Dies

Moore Still Has His Sights Leveled on a World's Title

Eleven years after he accepted his first buck for a professional fight, Archie Moore is still gunning for the one thing that he set out to win when he decided to trade punches for a living—a world's boxing championship.

"When I decided to turn pro," the hard-hitting St. Louis Negro light-heavyweight said, "I did so for two reasons, to win a title and make money. I've got money, but I still want that title."

Moore came within a gnat's eye of qualifying for a shot at Gus Lesnevich's crown last month when he dropped a split duke to Ezzard Charles, the clouting Cincinnati operative.

A victory for Moore—two newspapers thought Archie had triumphed over Charles—and Moore wouldn't be fighting Cuprtis (Hatchetman) Sheppard at Griffith Stadium Monday. Instead, he'd probably be conditioning himself for a go with Lesnevich.

Moore is a trouble-making slugger who can explode with one punch. He's boxed as a welterweight, lightheavy and heavyweight and has been ranked nationally in each division except as a welter.

At 30, Arch doesn't feel he's over the hill. Winning a championship has become an obsession with him. He's even offered to box Lesnevich for free, a concession hardly expected in the fight business.

"I'd fight him for nothing tomorrow," Arch explained. "I know I can beat him and I'd make plenty of dough with the title. So don't think I'm crazy when I say 'I'd fight Lesnevich for free."

The Arch already owns one triumph over the Hatchetman, scored in Baltimore last year in a 10-round thriller. Sheppard is strictly from hunger as far as boxers go, but the guy can hit. Moore knows that as Sheppard floored him twice in their Baltimore sizzler.

Although Arch will barely hit 170 for his Monday outing against 195 for Sheppard, he's already been made a 7-5 favorite.

Moore has met the best in the lightheavy division and has had real trouble with only two in his class—Jimmy Bivins, who flattened him in six in 1945, and Charles, a two-time winner over Moore.

On the black side of the ledger, Moore's record shows kayo verdicts over Holman Williams; Lloyd Marshall, who recently dropped Britain's Freddie Mills; Buddy Waller, Shamus O'Brien and Colon Chaney.

Archie has his sights set on a title before hanging up the gloves in retirement in San Diego, Calif., his adopted home, and if he gets a little rough with the Hatchetman Monday evening, it'll be because he wants Lesnevich to hear the noise.

Headliners Club Presents Awards To Shirley Povich

Shirley Povich, Post sports writer and "This Morning" columnist, yesterday was presented with the National Headliners Club Medal of Merit for consistently outstanding sports columning and writing.

Sixteen other men and two women also received medals of merit at thirteenth annual Headliners Club Frolic for newspaper, radio and newsreel men and news photographers held in Atlantic City.

Povich, the dean of Washington sports writers, won the column award for his expose of the handling of tickets for the Army-Notre Dame football game. His accounts of the final game of the 1946 World Series and the Army-Notre Dame football game earned him the sports reporting honor.

Czechs Beat France

Prague, June 14 (AP).—Czechoslovakia gained the final round of the European zone Davis Cup competition today by defeating France in the doubles match of their semifinal round meeting.

Redskins Will Instruct Kids

Like the Nats in baseball, the Washington Redskins will team up with the youngsters of the Washington area in football next fall.

Dick McCann, general manager of the 'Skins, said last night that Sammy Baugh and his mates will teach the kids "whatever they want to know" at clinics sponsored by The Post in September and October.

McCann talked by telephone with Owner George Marshall of the 'Skins in California and reported that Marshall "thinks it's a great idea."

"We won't be able to hold classes for the youngsters on Saturday, as you do in baseball in the Walter Johnson School," McCann said. "That's too busy a day for us preparing for Sunday's league play.

"But we can be with the youngsters any afternoon during the week, and I'm sure the 'Skins will get as much fun out of it as the Nats, Clark Griffith and Ossie Bluege have in baseball.

Football classes will be held on playgrounds over the area in cooperation with the Recreation Department.

The football schools will round out a cycle of instructions for youngsters in the three major sports—baseball, football and basketball. The Capitols, Washington's big league basketball players, taught the kids last season.

D. C. Horse Takes Honors At Upperville

Upperville, Va., June 14 (AP).—The Upperville Colt and Horse Show ended here today in a steady downpour of rain, but it failed to prevent a good crowd from being on hand for the annual event.

G. S. Gladney of Washington had the winner of the Admiral Cary T. Grayson Memorial Trophy for the thoroughbred breeding championship in his chestnut yearling colt by Gerald.

Champion confirmation hunter was Mrs. John T. Maloney's Prompt Payment, ridden throughout the show by Miss Ellie Woods Keith of Charlottesville. Reserve was Llangollen Farm's Daze.

The 3-year-old championship event is a highlight of the show and honors went to Mrs. A. C. Randolph's Raconteur, which was shown by Mrs. Alex Calvert of Warrenton.

A protest was entered as a 3-year-old must have won a first or second over jumps. This colt had won the Founders' Cup, which was not listed under the specifications of the championship class. However, the protest was overruled and he was awarded the tricolor. Reserve honors were awarded to Moonshiner, owned by Miss Cynthia Cannon of Millbrook, N. Y., and ridden by Mrs. Betty Perry.

Carnera to Appear In Outdoor Show

Turners' Arena announced yesterday that Primo Carnera, former heavyweight boxing champion of the world, has been signed to headline a wrestling show at Griffith Stadium on June 25.

An opponent for the "Ambling Alp" has not yet been selected, but reigning champion Frank Sexton, or former titleholder Babe Sharkey may get the shot.

Humble, Rice Guard, Signs Colt Contract

Baltimore, June 14 (AP).—The Baltimore Colts of the All-America Professional Football Conference announced tonight the signing of Weldon Humble, All-America guard from Rice.

Humble is the second member of the 1946 All-America selections by the Associated Press to sign with Baltimore. Ernie Case of UCLA, second team All-America, affixed his signature to a contract several weeks ago. The Colts also have acquired Hubert Bechtol, 1944 and 1945 All-America end from Texas.

Lois Hoffman a Big Leaguer On Mound for Girls' Team

By Roger Wolbarst
Post Reporter

ONE OF THE BIG spectator attractions at the Virginia Avenue Playground is the girls' softball team, which is ready and willing to take on all comers.

The chief reason for the girls' confidence is Pitcher Lois Cecilia Hoffman, 14-year-old. She looks like a big leaguer on the mound, and like the men in the big time, nothing seems to rattle her.

Poised and confident, Lois is at her best with runners on the bases. That's when she bears down and runs up her strikeout total.

Lois has had good coaching from her family, all of whom are ball players. Her dad, George Hoffman, was a sandlot star of the '20s, and brothers Everett and Kenneth were two of Virginia avenue's best players. Her kid brothers, Ralph and Tommy, and younger sister, Mary Anne, are all good players, too.

Another of the Virginia avenue girls has benefited from good construction. Patsy Kallas, 11, who looks like Phil Rizzuto when it comes to covering ground, is the sister of Eastern High's star second baseman, Bill Kallas. Another brother, Bubba, holds down the middle sack for Hine Junior High. Both are Virginia Avenue Playground alumni.

Other outstanding players among the girls are Shirley Mae Snakenberg, 12; her sister, Nancy, 10, and Wrennie Isabelle Soper, 12. All of these girls take a real cut up there at the plate, and make Virginia Avenue Playground a tough team to beat.

GENE FAMIGLIETTI, of the Merrick Boys Club, is a talented accordion player; so good in fact, that with a little more experience he might be able to play professionally.

Gene, however, has little time to practice music during the baseball season, as he is busy playing both soft and hard ball. In answer to the suggestion that it might be well to practice hard on the accordion to make a professional career possible, Gene retorted with "there's more money in baseball than I can find in that accordion. Look at Joe DiMaggio."

Little Bobby Stauffer is only 7, but already he takes part in basketball, baseball and football at the Fort Greble Playground.

Bobby drew roars of applause with his performance before one of the George Washington University basketball games. It seems Bobby just wandered onto to floor, and when one of the players tossed him the ball, he got set and shot. It went in and gave the crowd such a surprise that they gave him the ball again. After he made six straight, he missed one and retired. Quite a feat for a 7-year-old.

Midgets to Try Again on Friday

West Lanham, Md., speedway officials will make every effort to inagurate their 1947 midget automobile racing season Friday night when they present a seven event program on the lightning fast track at 8:30 o'clock, weather permitting. The Lanham inaugural has been rained out during the past two weeks.

Mike Joseph, President of the American Racing Drivers' Club and one of the leading eastern drivers, definitely will compete at Lanham Friday while Tony Bonadies, Charlie Braslin, Dutch Schaefer and Harry Hart also expect to race. Additional entries will be announced.

Rain Washes Out Kids Track Meet

More than 300 youngsters from five clubs of the Metropolitan Police Boys Club suffered keen disappointment when rain yesterday washed out their scheduled track and field meet at Central High School Stadium.

Program Supervisor Harry Childs said that every effort would be made to hold the meet sometime this week, possibly Friday.

Fall Guy Splashes to 3-Length Win at Charles Town

Out Fishing...

By Jack Bell

ANGLERS who prefer black bass fishing to trout or salt-water are apparently getting very anxious as indicated by the number of calls we have received. It will now only be 15 more days before opening of the season in Maryland, and the season opens in Virginia Friday next June 20. Maryland offers the local angler water of greater variety and nearer than streams in Virginia.

For the benefit of fishermen not knowing where nearby bass waters are we name a few streams that produce wonderful small-mouth bass fishing when the water is clear. The angler with a little exploring spirit will soon find some real fishing holes and excellent casting areas.

The Potomac River from Great Falls up to Harpers Ferry is excellent boat and canoe water. For the wader there are few stretches but we recommend the river above Harpers Ferry and up to Dam No. 3.

Maryland bass streams—a few of the nearby ones—are the Monocasy, Big and Little Hunting Creeks just above their junction with the Monocasy; Antietam and Conocheague Creeks.

* * * *

LARGE mouth bass are found in the Potomac from Fort Washington down to Mattowoman Creek, including the Mattawoman and Piscataway Creeks. These waters are tidal waters and the season does not open until August 1.

The season on Maryland non-tidal waters opens July 1 and continues to November 30. Resident license fee is $1.50 and nonresident $5.50, which permits a nonresident holder to fish all Maryland water within the season. This year residents of the District of Columbia are offered by Maryland the privilege of a special Potomac River angling license at the cost of $1.75. We have received a number of inquiries if such a license permits fishing in the C. & O. Canal—the answer is NO. We here quote the regulation recently passed by Maryland's Legislature.

7,000 Fans See Sincon Run Second

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Charles Town, W. Va., June 14. Performing over a track that resembled the mixings for the filling of a chocalte pie, G. A. Lawson's Fall Guy splashed to victory in the featured John Bowling Purse.

With Jockey Sammy Palumbo, who makes few appearances in the mud, doing the booting, the 3-year-old led N. S. Scava's Sincon to the wire by three lengths. A like distance from the place came Gertie O, owned by Mercer Love 3d.

The crowd of 7000 probably had heard that Fall Guy would have won his last had he not shied in midstretch. As a result they made him the favorite throughout the wagering and his backers took down a $5 mutuel. The young gelding, saddled by Bernie Bond, was clocked in 1:21 4-5 for the 6 furlongs plus 120 feet that is designated here as the Charles Town course.

Run in Parade Fashion

The race was run in parade fashion. The seven starters finished exactly as they were running in the opening furlong. Fall Guy had command in the initial jumps with Sincon closest and then Gertie O, Moveable Type, One Lee and Ju Ju. Fall Guy was not threatened and was coasting at the end.

The fourth race, the Glenn Jackson Purse, brought two near accidents. F. C. Maisel's Over Gold and J. Matthais' Laddie's Topic met with mishaps but miraculously both horses and riders were uninjured. Over Gold was making a bold move along the inside rail when he slipped and fell, sliding some 20 yards with Jockey Stanley Austin still in the saddle. Austin was soon up, but the horse was "knocked out." He finally arose and shook himself to the cheers of the crowd.

Laddie's Topic went to the outside fence and Jockey George Cusimano was bounced over the rail. The horse held his feet and Cusimano was more embarrassed than hurt. This race, at 7 furlongs, was won by L. Salus' Sea Pilot under good handling by Jockey Willie Nertney. Sea Pilot, an 8-year-old, paid $4.80.

Buckle Time Scores

Mrs. K. S. Basehore's Buckle Time, making his first start of the year, proved the winner of the first race and hung up a $9.60 win mutuel. Jockey Nertney drove the 7-year-old into the wire ahead of Doctor's Care and Blablah.

There was a $25.40 pay-off on the daily double when Jockey Eddie Churchill took E. Curry's Stick to Kate to the front in the opening jumps and stayed there. The 4-year-old filly was a $4.60 favorite in the field of eight.

Churchill came right back to ride another winner in the third race and again was in the Curry Colors. He was aboard Gray Moose and brought the mare to the front to hold on with good courage in the final drive. She paid $10.60.

Phalanx Comes Through by Head in Dwyer Stakes

Covering The Counties

THE $10,000 Fairfax High School War Memorial Fund goes into its second week tomorrow with $3400 already in the till.

The War Memorial, honoring the 640 Fairfax alumni who served in the recent war, will provide the school with an enclosed athletic stadium, floodlights for night football and baseball, and a seating capacity of 5000.

Sculptor Russell Fiore, designer of the armed forces honorable discharge button, has offered to help design the layout.

Fairfax Athletic Director Bob Mavity expects to play several of his 1947 football games under the lights. Because of the increased night game attendance, he expects a larger intake of money that will enable the school to complete a track, tennis courts and an outdoor swimming pool by 1952.

THE Silver Spring baseball team, unbeaten in three games, will try to extend its Montgomery County League lead today when it entertains the ninth place Cissel-Saxon American Legion Post at 3 p. m. Four other games are on the slate.

Games Today

Vienna vs. M. T. Rust at Falls Church; Falls Church at Occoquan-Lorton; Fairfax vs. White Sox at Baileys Crossroads; Centerville at Annandale, all games starting at 1:15 p. m.

THE Montgomery County Recreation Department plans an extensive athletic program for residents of its area this summer. Softball leagues for both boys and girls in the 10-11, 12-13, 14-15 and 16-17 age groups are in the making, as are a tennis and possibly a swimming tournament.

Louis Mitchell, filling in as athletic head for Blair H. Smith, who is on a leave of absence, says that within two years the Montgomery County Recreation Department will at least equal that of the District of Columbia.

A stadium and track, together with seats holding 15,000 spectators, is planned for Silver Spring, which has a population of 60,000. In addition, the Recreation Department is going 50-50 with Montgomery Blair High in the building of that school's stadium, which when completed will hold 5000 people.

The department recently purchased the Sligo Park golf course, located on the site of the old Argyle Country Club. The course was opened to the public yesterday. And 17 new recreation centers have been bought, and will be ready for use by next summer.

McLEAN, leading the Fairfax County Class "B" League by a full game, travels to Forestville today to take on the third-place team from that community at 1:15 p. m. Four other games are on today's slate.

But Why Not Beaten Out In Stretch

New York, June 14 (AP).—Phalanx added the Dwyer Stakes at Aqueduct to his Belmont Stakes triumph today by getting up in the last jump for a head victory over But Why Not, the only filly in the race.

A crowd of 35,729 saw Chilean Ruperto Donoso barely get his mount up in time to win the $40,800 purse and boost Phalanx's earnings over the $200,000 mark.

Brabancon faded to third, six lengths back of the first two, with Greentree Stable's Tailspin taking fourth.

Phalanx, owned by Sonny Whitney and Abe Hewitt, ran the mile and a quarter in 2:05 4/5 and returned $3.70, $3.00 and $2.50 across the board.

But Why Not was $5.50 and $3.90 for place and show and Brabancon $3.80 for third.

The usually slow-starting Riskolater came along in fifth place, trailed by Jule Fink's Royal Lover; William Helis' Jobstown, Hells' Lady's Ace; and, trailing the pack, one of last year's juvenile stars, Blue Border.

Carrying top weight of 126 pounds, Phalanx was well back through the first three quarters of a mile, with But Why Not only short yards in front of him.

Heading into the far turn, both started to move and as they straightened for home, the Texas-owned filly from Robert J. Kleberg's stable poked her way to the front. All the way down the stretch the two fought it out, with Phalanx barely getting to the wire first.

Public Highs May Be Next To Join National Federation

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

WASHINGTON'S public high schools may be the next to join the National Federation of State High School Athletic Associations. Maryland and Virginia joined the association last year, leaving the District schools the remaining Middle Atlantic holdouts.

Hardy Pearce, director of athletics in the District high schools, has written to the NFSHSAA's central office in Chicago, asking for the rules of the association. The report he receives may be brought up for approval by the board of principals next year.

The NFSHSAA is in favor of having the high schools refrain from competing against the prep schools. It also favors the 18-year-old athletic age limit.

THE 27-YEAR-OLD District of Columbia Baseball Umpires Association will lose a big customer next year in the nearby Virginia high schools. These schools will employ members of the 1-year-old Northern Virginia Officials Association.

That group, headed by Frank Rockwell of Washington-Lee High of Arlington, was recently chartered by the National Baseball Congress, which holds the big national semipro tournament every year in Wichita, Kans.

The NBC, which is ruled by Ray Dumont and George Sisler, has given the northern Virginia umps jurisdiction, not only over its own area, but over the nearby Maryland and District of Columbia as well.

The northern Virginia umps already have contracted the Washington Metropolitan League games, plus the Middle Eastern Service Conference, Junior American Legion loop of northern Virginia and the Fairfax County leagues.

It numbers among its members two former minor league arbiters, Al Porter of the Alabama State League, and Bill Roe of the Pony League. Roe is a graduate of George Barr's National League Umpire School.

JIM MUNRO, former Central High baseball coach, has lined up 12 members of The Post's All-Interhigh squad to play on his team in the Junior City League this summer. But strangely enough, the team, with such an aggregation of stars, is having a tough time finding a sponsor.

All-Interhigh members of Munro's team are Bobby Rohr, Shorty Nitowitz, Jess Houston, Stan King, Tex Jones and Bill Witzel, of Coolidge; Bill Kallas, Sonny Wesley and Sal DiGiorgi, of Eastern; Pat O'Neil, of Wilson; Bobby Jones, of Tech, and Poochie Negri, of Western. Other players are Marty Cribbins of Eastern, Johnny Colbert of St. Anthony's, and Danny Bass and Benny DuVall of Woodward.

NOTES—The chances are bright that the George Washington High team of Alexandria will repeat its 1947 baseball championship performance next season. Every member of this year's team will be back in 1948 . . .

Horseman

By Don Henderson

HORSESHOW Judge North Fletcher tells how he and co-judge Otto Furr pinned the championship ribbon on Mary Davey's owner-ridden Clifton's Champ at Richmond.

Fletcher said he went like a veteran and jumped with perhaps a hind tick or two only. In all his classes he galloped on in hunter style and showed the way to both young and old competition.

The Maloney owned and Elie Wood Keith ridden Substitution was pinned reserve with the same owned Prompt Payment next in line.

Fletcher does not believe in the point scoring of winning the championship honors.

"If the judges are capable of awarding ribbons, they should be allowed to have their choices of blue winners in the ring finally, to decide the big awards. As it is a horse can pick up enough points to win by going in lots of classes and taking away second, thirds and never a blue."

* * * *

FLETCHER also is in favor of having an annual fall sale of colts, sutable to become hunters, up to the age of 3, divided into clean breds and not cleanbreads.

This definitely looks like something. It will afford farmers a certain outlet and men who are looking for things to make, a chance to look them over, invest and still not have to search all over the land for them. It has lots of merit.

Jack Prestage has brought up the point that there are some 3-year-olds that came to themselves in their fourth year, so that breeders might find they should hold onto their youngsters till that age.

Federal Golf Opens Tomorrow

The annual three-day Federal Golf Association medal play tournament begins tomorrow at 9 a. m. over the Prince Georges County Club course.

Two hundred and twenty-six Federal golfers, comprising the largest field in the history of the event, have filed entries. Post entries are expected to swell the field to over 250.

The owners of the 15 low cards in tomorrow's and Tuesday's medal play will qualify for the championship on Wednesday. Defending titlist is Jerry Hart.

More than 40 4-man teams will compete for the four team trophies. Defending the Mellon Cup for low gross in the Class A is the Army Map Service. Defending the Woodring Bowl for low net in the Class A is the General Accounting Office.

The President's Cup for low gross in Class B was won last year by the Federal Power Commission. Census Bureau captured the Sarazen Trophy by winning the Class B low net laurels.

Among the outstanding golfers entered are L. T. Harrison and LeRoy Smith, former champions and George Voight, Jim Kinder, B. A. Schreiver and Joe Balestri.

Tomorrow's pairings:

Uptown Parking In Silver Spring To Be Discussed

A 10-man delegation of the Silver Spring, Md., Board of Trade will call on the Montgomery County Commissioners Tuesday in Rockville to express the trade group's dissatisfaction with the county's stand on the public off-street parking lot for the Silver Spring business district.

The trade group has gone on record as being "very dissatisfied" with the county's lack of progress in obtaining and developing public parking lots for which a $900,000 bond issue was passed in the 1945 State Legislature.

Andrew Kessinger, special parking lot commissioner, said the commissioners have agreed to reconsider the question of establishing a lot on Elsworth dr. near the Hecht store now under construction. They have also reversed their decision to cut down the size of the lot planned for the lot bounded by Sligo, Georgia and Silver Spring aves. and Fenton st.

Young Singers to Get Opera Guild Auditions

The second of a series of auditions for young singers in Washington and a 100-mile radius was announced yesterday by the Washington Opera Guild, Inc.

The auditions will be held next Saturday and Sunday and —— cations may be obtained at Guild headquarters, 2323 Pennsylvania ave. nw.

End of U. S. Price Controls Hit All World, 4-H Campers Told

Garland C. Routt, State Department information and liaison officer, told 4-H Club campers offi- yesterday that United States price control elimination affected the entire world.

Routt urged the 184 boys and girls attending the camp to consider the United States foreign and domestic policies as "two sides of the same coin."

He addressed an assembly on international affairs at Arlington Farms auditorium.

"As we know, prices increased considerably when the controls were removed," he declared. "This increased the prices which other nations are required to pay for products they buy for the United States.

"In a time of world-wide scarcity and poverty," he continued, "this increase was felt deeply in the pocketbooks and empty bellies of people all over the world."

The youths attending the encampment, which ends Wednesday, are from 45 states and Puerto Rico. They plan to attend historic Christ Church in Alexandria in a body this morning and to visit Arlington House and the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier this afternoon.

Dr. J. Lossing Buck, head of the Land Use Branch of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization and another speaker yesterday, told of agriculture in China. He suggested the 4-H Club members seek more information about farm practices in other lands.

Buck proposed the clubs used excess funds to send representatives to China to learn some Chinese agricultural techniques which might be applied in the United States.

Gen. Alexander Bids U. S. Arm To Keep Peace

Brig. Gen. Edward H. Alexander, chief of training of the Army Air Forces, told a Flag Day audience in Silver Spring yesterday America must keep armed to keep the peace.

The ceremony was one of the few Flag Day observances in the Washington area not canceled or postponed because of rain.

The postponed observances included the Flag Day parade from Constitution ave. and 7th st. nw. to Washington Monument grounds and the Sylvan Theater program planned by Washington Lodge No. 15, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Elks Reset Events

James H. McCoole of the Elks Flag Day committee said last night the parade will be held at 7 p. m. today and the ceremony at Sylvan Theater at 7:30, if the rains let up. Otherwise, he said, the parade will be canceled and the ceremony held at Elks home, 919 H st. nw.

Representative Bertrand W. Gearhart (R., Calif.) is scheduled to deliver the main address.

The Silver Spring ceremony was held in the National Guard Armory there with about 100 persons attending despite the rain. Representative J. Glenn Beall (R., Md.) read a history of the flag.

General Alexander, the principal speaker, told them all American wars had been started because the United States was weak and some other nation recognized that fact.

"We must give our support to the United Nations to prevent war," he declared, "but until it has proved effective we must have an adequate and fully equipped military force."

U. N. Flag Rites Today

The Silver Spring Flag Day parade was canceled, the Silver Spring Lodge No. 1677 of the Elks, sponsoring the celebration, said.

A ceremony during which the United Nations honor flag will be hoisted along with the American flag will be held this afternoon at Griffith Stadium between the Washington - Detroit baseball double-header, Brooks Harding 5111 Cathedral ave. nw., who designed the U. N. flag, said. The ceremony was originally planned for yesterday afternoon.

Among the canceled programs was the one planned by the Woman's Relief Corps of the Auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic. Mrs. Ethel A. Ferris, 1733 17th st. nw., corps president, said no attempt would be made to hold the ceremony which was set for 7 last night on the Capitol's east steps.

Brazil Suggests July 15 For Ministers' Meeting

Buenos Aires, Argentina, June 14 (U.P.)—The Brazilian government has proposed July 15 as the opening date of the Rio de Janeiro Conference of American Foreign Ministers, suggesting that the meeting last until July 31, it was reported today.

Responsible sources said Foreign Minister Juan A. Bramuglia was consulting with Foreign Office experts to determine whether the proposed dates were acceptable to Argentina.

Conclusion of a continental defense treaty by all 21 American republics is the chief item in the conference agenda.

9 Petitions For Rezoning Disapproved

Approval of one and disapproval of nine other petitions for rezoning has been recommended by the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

The commission favored application of F. Moran McConihe for commercial zoning at River rd. and Great Falls rd., Potomac, Md. McConihe plans to erect a shopping center, including a gasoline service station, a theater, three large stores, six small stores and parking lot for 170 cars. Those announced yesterday as recommended for disapproval were:

Petition for commercial zoning of a 7-acre tract at River and Goldsboro rds., Bethesda, adjacent to Kenwood Country Club, and a petition for commercial zoning at Greentree rd. in Bradley Mills Grove, both filed by R. Bates Warren.

Petition for commercial zoning on east side of Brockerville rd., Littonsville asked by Marshall and Ethel D. Lehman.

Petition for commercial zoning of five lots on the north side of River rd. and the west side of Wilson lane, Cohasset subdivision, asked by David S. and Elizabeth Hendrick, Martha H. Edmonston and Helen H. Mckenna.

Petition for commercial zoning of three lots on the northwest side of Maple ave. between Park and Grant aves. Takoma Park, previously refused.

Petition for commercial zoning of five lots on the west side of Georgia ave. extending north to Reedie Place, Wheaton, asked by Chief James and George Limber.

Petition for commercial zoning of northwest corner of Old Bladensburg rd. and Lexington dr., Four Corners, asked by George J. Moss, president of Woodmoor Development Corporation.

Petition of Rogers W. Eisinger for apartment zoning for land on the north side of Jones Bridge rd., about 1600 feet east of Connecticut ave.

Petition for industrial zoning of Oxmeade Farm, near Norwood, asked by William W. and Helen W. Moore.

PUC to Begin Rate Talks With Pepco

The Public Utilities Commission revealed yesterday it will begin conferences with Potomac Electric Power Company officials "as soon as convenient" to consider revamping of rate-setting machinery.

Both PUC and the company agree that controversial provisions of the "sliding scale" rate arrangement, which were the subject of a three-year court battle ending last May 5, need to be worked out in greater detail.

PUC Chairman James E. Flanagan said the discussions would center on these points:

1. PUC's 1944 method of determining the company's "rate base" should be defined in greater detail.

(A "rate base" is the amount of company property from which it is entitled to a "fair return" because it's used for public service.)

Set Up New Method in 1944

In 1944, PUC set up a new method for determining the rate base. It gives the company credit for the amount of money originally spent to build facilities used for public service. From this total, however, is subtracted the amount the company has set aside to cover depreciation of the facilities.

This is "a new departure," Flanagan said, and should be "spelled out" in more definite terms.

2. The method of making rate adjustments on the basis of the company's annual financial operations should be reviewed.

Rate changes now are governed by a formula set up in 1924, when the company was allowed a "fair return" of 7½ per cent on its rate base. The fair return figure has gradually diminished to 5½ per cent, ordered by PUC in 1944.

The formula should therefore be examined to see if it needs to be brought up to date, Flanagan declared.

3. PUC will consider plans for a "periodic review" of the rate at which it permits the company to set up its depreciation reserve.

(A depreciation reserve is money set aside by the company to cover cost of property when it is "retired from service" because it's worn out or cannot be used for any reason.)

PUC now allows the company to charge 2.7 per cent of the cost of its depreciable property to its annual expense. The commission would like to review this figure periodically to make sure it's fair to both the company and consumers.

James Follin Heads Michigan Alumni Here

James W. Follin, assistant Federal Works Administrator, has been elected president of the University of Michigan Alumni Club of Washington, it was announced yesterday.

Other new officers named by the alumni group are D. B. Ventres, vice president; T. Maxwell Collier, secretary, and Thomas P. Hayden, Thomas L. Smull and William E. Carey, governors.

Band Concerts Start At Walter Reed Hospital

Betts Is Named To Arlington School Board

Ernest Betts has been named by the Arlington school electoral trustee board to fill a "lame duck" vacancy on the county school board.

Betts, an administrative assistant at the Agriculture Department library, was picked from three candidates during a board meeting Friday night. He takes office July 1.

Previously indorsed by the Jefferson Civic League, Betts was nominated by Fred L. Campbell of that organization.

The other candidates, T. Oscar Smith and Mrs. Edmund Campbell, had the backing of the Arlington Civic Federation, the Citizens Committee for School Improvement, and the New Arlington Citizens Association.

The vacancy, created by the expiration of member Jackson Ross' term, is the last to be filled by appointment of the electoral board.

Arlington voted overwhelmingly for direct election of school board members in a referendum May 27. Under the new arrangement members will be elected next November.

Electoral board members are Mrs. Paul Smith, president, Earl Beale and Harold E. Stone.

Memorial Today For Last-Century Chief of Marines

Memorial services for Brig. Gen. Archibald Henderson, Marine Corps commandant from 1820 to 1859, will be held at 11 a. m. today at Pohick Church, Fairfax County, Va.

The Henderson Memorial Plaque in honor of the general will be presented to the parish by Maj. Gen. Lemuel C. Shepherd, jr., assistant commandant of the Marine Corps.

General Henderson, a hero of the War of 1812 and the Indian uprising of 1836, was born in Fairfax County in 1783, the son of a Pohick Church vestryman.

NOTICE TO DELINQUENT TAXPAYERS

Please come forward and settle delinquent taxes. An early settlement with the County Treasurer will eliminate a lot of lost time and trouble and will save the delinquent taxpayer extra costs, penalties and interest.

Paying your taxes goes hand in hand with balancing the budget and the wise spending of the taxpayers' money by the authorities charged with this responsibility. Your school system, your police department, your fire protection, your garbage collection and other governmental functions depend upon all taxpayers doing their part.

If one taxpayer fails to pay his or her legitimate taxes, it necessarily throws an undue burden on the taxpayers who do pay their taxes.

Again calling your attention that interest begins to run on all unpaid 1946 taxes July 1.

JOHN LOCKE GREEN,
Treasurer of Arlington County.

Unusually Interesting Job
FOR
Unusually Qualified Secretary

Assistant to the President of an important local enterprise has opening for an intelligent, capable secretary. She should have poise, tact, and initiative—and enough self-confidence to handle routine matters herself, as she becomes familiar with her job content.

Her work will have plenty of interesting variety, and will give her an opportunity to be "in the know" on finance, taxation, economics, real estate, construction, business trends and management problems. Good salary and excellent working conditions, including 5-day week and air-conditioned office. In typewritten letter of application, please give complete history of past employment, education, age, marital status, salary requirement, etc. Box 104, Washington Post.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, JUNE 15, 1947

Sons Just Like the Fellows Who Married Dear Old Mom

Eminent Dads Point With Pride

By Marjorie Binford Woods

TODAY on Dad's Day, by special permission of the law of averages, the spotlight is turned on a few outstanding Washington fathers whose offspring are veritable "chips off the old block."

Watch dad puff up when anyone points proudly to his alter ego and says "like father, like son."

One of many such fathers is Senator Arthur Vandenberg. Though Vandenberg isn't a sentimentalist, it's easy to see he delights in having his only son, Art, jr., "following in his footsteps." As the Senator's executive assistant, young Vandenberg's features are much like his father's. He has the same piercing brown eyes and appealing smile.

Though not quite so tall, his build and weight match to a "T" the measurement of his boss as a young man.

Young Art graduated from Dartmouth in 1928 and started to work for his father as an "odd job man." He became executive secretary in 1936 and in 1942 joined the Army Air Forces as a private. Art has earned his place as right-hand man to the Senator, whose responsibilities have vastly increased in the past few years.

Dad's Campaign Manager

Last fall he successfully managed his father's election campaign in Michigan without his dad ever stepping foot in his home State until election. His own idea was a half-hour radio transcript dramatizing the highlights of the Senator's career in "March of Time" style.

"My father didn't hear the recording until he went home to vote," Secretary Vandenberg explained, "but he semed to approve of it—in fact was very touched by the production."

Late every afternoon in the Senate Office Building you'll likely find these two with heads together, going over senatorial business. One senses an extraordinary closeness of spirit between them. Though the Senator's speeches and opinions are his own, it's safe to say that on most issues their judgments coincide.

Another Good Team

FRED M. VINSON, jr., is another notable's son who, to date, seems to be following in his father's footsteps. Recently graduated from Washington and Lee, young Fred, who also looks like his Chief Justice dad, won many of the same honors accorded to the senior Vinson at Centre College in Danville, Ky., in 1909. Both excelled in their studies and graduated with honors. Both served as presidents of the student body of their respective schools; and this year, Fred, jr., was named "All Virginia Star" in athletics, just as Fred, sr., was named "All Kentucky Star" in his day.

Vinson's younger son, Jim, now a high school student, also takes after his dad in many ways. But when it comes to breaking the family college record, Jim makes no promises, "Let's wait and see," he says.

Senator Bourke Hickenlooper would rather sit all day in a duck blind trying his luck—than feast

See WOOD, Page 8, Column 3.

TWO of a kind are father and son in the Senator Bourke Hickenlooper family. Collecting guns of all descriptions is one of their shared hobbies, with hunting and fishing first on their list of outdoor sports. Above, the Senator examines his favorite piece of firearms, while 14-year-old David Hickenlooper looks on interestedly

EVERY day is "Father-and-Son Day" for Senator Arthur Vandenberg and his son, Arthur, Jr., who serves as the Senator's executive secretary. Late every afternoon in the Vandenberg office the pair can usually be found (as shown above) with heads together over senatorial business

LIKE father, like son, are Congressman Charles Fletcher from San Diego, Calif., and 16-year-old Pete Fletcher. Measuring 6 feet, 3 inches in height, the Representative is about to be overtaken by his younger son (above) who stands 6 feet, 2 inches. The Fletcher's older son, "Kim," now at Stanford University, towers over his father by 1 inch. All are champion swimmers with a passion for the outdoors. Fishing is their main sport at this season of the year, and they report some good catches in local streams

Service Set Redeploys For Season

By Bessie Hackett

WITH wedding bells about to ring for several Army daughters and juniors flocking home for the holidays, there's a definite accent on youth in the service set these June days.

Prenuptial parties are crowding the calendar for Pat Richardson, daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. William Lloyd Richardson, and Josephine Skinner, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Russell Skinner. Both will don wedding veils next Saturday, Josephine to become the bride of King Carr of East Lansing, Mich., in the garden of her parents' home in Georgetown, and Pat to repeat her vows with Herman John Zmolek of Ontario, Calif., in the chapel at Bolling Field.

Tomorrow evening Col. and Mrs. W. I. Brady will entertain at an informal buffet dinner at their home in Falls Church for Miss Richardson and her fiance. Weather permitting, the party will be held outdoors. Home from South Bend, Ind., in time for the festivities, is the Bradys' 19-year-old daughter, Louise, who has just finished her sophomore year at St. Mary's College, Notre Dame.

BRIG. GEN. and Mrs. George L. Eberle's quarters at Fort Myer are echoing with the latest college chatter. Their daughter, Frances, is back from Randolph-Macon, where she'll be a senior next fall, and her cousin, Lieut. William L. Webb, fresh out of the Military Academy, also is a guest of the household. Lieutenant Webb will leave this week to visit his home in Mineral Wells, Tex., before reporting for duty at Fort Riley, Kans.

Tall, dark Dorothy Anne Ferenbaugh, daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Claude B. Ferenbaugh, has just received a diploma from William and Mary to hang on the wall of her parents' quarters at Fort Myer. The Ferenbaughs have just returned from three weeks at their cottage at Keuka Lake, N. Y., where they were accompanied by Col. and Mrs. J. B. Murphy.

Another sweet girl graduate at Fort Myer for the summer is charming Sally Chamberlin,

PALS in whatever they do, whether it's gardening in their own back yard or working with tools at their basement work-bench, Col. Joseph O. Butcher and his 6½-year-old son, Joseph O., Jr., pause in their weeding chores to grin at "Mom" who is looking on from the comfort of the back porch of their home

Mrs. Burdick Puts Up a Marquee

No Rainchecks for This Party

By Marie McNair

MRS. WILLIAM A. BURDICK is one hostess who planned a garden party this spring with perfect aplomb. "Never mind if it does rain," she had said before the debut tea of her daughter, Nancy, yesterday afternoon. A green and white striped marquee had been put up in the garden, connecting the wide flagstone terrace with the greensward.

Dr. and Mrs. Burdick had taken their places in the drawing room to welcome their friends. Nancy, who is tall and fair, wore a white Swiss organdy made with a pin-tucked fitted bodice. Her skirt was yards wide, with a deep full flounce at the bottom. She carried a spray of white slipper orchids. Mrs. Burdick's gown was of rose silk chiffon with a slashed neckline and draped skirt. A pin and matching earrings of moonstones and rubies gave accent to her costume.

Flowers Decorate Table

THE FLOWERS were white—lilies, delphinium and baby's breath —on the tea table inside; peonies and other summer flowers on the buffet outside.

Mrs. Burdick had asked some of her friends to assist. The group included Mrs. Francis Hill, jr., Mrs. Ellsworth Alvord, Mrs. George R. Farrell, Miss Anne Tuohy, Mrs. Paul Forrest Myers, Mrs. John Russell Yates, Mrs. Clarence M. Charest, Mrs. Garnett P. Ault, Mrs. Frank Costenbader, Mrs. Chevalier Jackson of Philadelphia, Mrs. E. Barrett Prettyman.

Also helping were Mrs. Sam E. Whitaker, Mrs. Parker West, Mrs. Frank J. Wideman, Mrs. James Craig Peacock, Mrs. John Townsend, Mrs. Robert E. Cline, Mrs. William C. Meloy, Mrs. Robert L. Warfield.

Miss Beatrice Blair, who made her debut Wednesday, and Miss Carolyn Bradley who will make hers tomorrow, assisted Miss Burdick.

Others were Miss Pamela Cushing of New York, Miss Suzanne Alexander, who will be presented to society Tuesday; Miss Sherley Smith, a debutante last Friday; Miss Nel Townsend, Miss Ellen Owens, Miss Ann Schafer, Miss Patsy Roberts and Miss Florence Holleman.

Dinner and Dance Follow

FOLLOWING the tea Miss Burdick, her assistants and their beaux were entertained at a dinner dance at the Chevy Chase Club given by Dr. and Mrs. George R. Farrell.

A member of the congressional set who'll be a debutante next winter is Miss Cornelia Langer, daughter of Senator and Mrs. William Langer. She was graduated from Holton Arms last year. Cornelia has had a year at Sarah Lawrence College where her sister, Mrs. King Irwin, the former Lydia Langer, was graduated a few years ago.

Speaking of Lydia, she is expected down from Short Hills, N. J., this weekend for a few days while her husband attends his class reunion at Princeton.

Addition to Deb Group

MISS SARAH FLY, daughter of Mrs. James Lawrence Fly, is the newest addition to the debutante group which, from all indications, will be a bumper crop next winter.

Miss Fly will be presented to society at a tea dance at the Washington Club on December 23. She'll leave tomorrow for Pine Orchard, Conn., to spend the summer with her mother who wants to be near her son, James Lawrence Fly, jr., a student at Yale University summer school. In September Sara, who has just graduated from

Town Talk—

By Eva Hinton

WHEN the Hungarian Nazis took over the Foreign Office in Budapest they called together all the employes and asked them to take an oath of allegiance to the new government. "Those who don't want to take the oath can leave the room," they said.

Only two people left the room and one was a thin, little brown-eyed girl. Kato Mariassy was arrested by a policeman with a gun. After a few hours in custody she was taken before the new Nazi Foreign Minister who asked her why she refused to swear loyalty to the new regime. Miss Mariassy explained that she wouldn't work for the Nazis.

The Minister congratulated her on her courage and promised that no harm would come to her, a somewhat different answer from the one she would have gotten from a German Nazi.

Nevertheless, people in Budapest were afraid to employ her and she didn't get another job until after the war when she came to Washington as secretary to the Hungarian Minister, Aladar Szegedy-Maszak.

Under the Russian bombardment, the people of Budapest lived in cellars without water or light. Miss Mariassy and her sister shared an apartment house cellar with 35 other people. The cellar was dirty and they had no water except snow which they melted.

"Fortunately," she reminisced, "there was a lot of snow in Budapest that winter. When I used to say 'white as snow,' I'd no idea how really black and dirty snow is when melted. And we drank it, washed in it, and cooked with it most gratefully."

Life in the cellar was horrible enough for a well person, but Miss Mariassy's sister was expecting the stork and her illness was complicated by an attack of arthritis, which was crippling her.

A doctor, who lived in another section of their refuge, wrote a prescription. Although it was considered very dangerous to go above ground, young Kato determined to get the medicine, despite the rain of bombs.

SLIPPING out of the cellar, she found the town in ruins and the Russians only about a mile away, shooting at every moving object. She ran from pharmacy to pharmacy. They were all closed and the owners had fled. She saw a lot of dead in the streets. She took shelter behind a mound until she saw legs and arms sticking out.

At last she found a pharmacist living in the cellar beneath his shop. He emerged long enough to fill her prescription. She dashed back with it to her sister only to meet frustration. The medicine was in the form of injections and the doctor had gone to a safer cellar taking his equipment with him.

(In case you wonder, the baby arrived safely.)

One day Miss Mariassy and her sister saw chocolate being sold in the street. It was the first

Miss Fleming Becomes Bride Of Mr. Wright

In a ceremony performed at the home of the bride's parents at 7210 Fairfax rd., Edgemoor, at 8:30 last night, Miss Marguerite von Beust Fleming, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fleming, was married to Kenneth Aldro Wright, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred E. Wright, also of Washington. Canon Albert H. Lucas officiated.

Escorted by her father, the bride wore an heirloom gown of embroidered Chinese satin. Rosepoint lace used by the family for five generations trimmed her gown and wedding veil. She carried a cascade bouquet of daisies.

Mrs. Frank B. Jewett, jr., attended her sister as matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Miss Elsie von Beust Bandekow and Miss Margaret von Lengerke, cousins of the bride, and Miss Flavia Lee. All were costumed in flame jersey and carried yellow and white daisies. Frank B. Jewett 3d acted as ring-bearer.

William Finley Wright was his brother's best man and ushers were John A. Buttrick, John Washington Davidge, jr., Robert F. Fleming, jr., and Frank B. Jewett, jr.

After a motor trip to the West Coast, the Canadian Rockies and Mexico, the couple will reside in Boston.

The bride, a granddaughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Fleming of Washington and the late Mr. and Mrs. Justus von Lengerke of Orange, N. J., attended the Madeira School and Mount Holyoke College. Mr. Wright, grandson of the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Wright of Washington and the late Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Finley, was educated at St. Alban's School, Haverford College and Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Miss Schilling To Become Bride

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Lewis Schilling announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Barbara Ellen Schilling, to Richard Mason Thompson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Mason Thompson. The bride-elect and her fiance are graduates of Western High School. Mr. Thompson is now completing an architectural course at Columbia Technical Institute after having served 12 months in the armed forces in Germany.

Wedding Unites Army Families In Rites Here

Miss Marian Ross, daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Lewis Tenney Ross of Washington and Webster Groves, Mo., yesterday became the bride of Maj. Samuel Karrick, jr., son of Col. and Mrs. Samuel N. Karrick, San Francisco, Calif. The wedding took place in All Souls' Memorial Church, the Rev. H. H. D. Sterrett officiating.

The bride, escorted by her father, wore a gown of ivory satin trimmed in rosepoint lace and an heirloom veil of Valenciennes lace. She carried gardenias, stephanotis and orchids. Attending her sister as maid of honor, Miss Katharine Ross was attired in old rose taffeta. The bridesmaids, Mrs. Frank J. Richardson and Miss Dorothy Schwartz, were in blue taffeta. All carried bouquets of snapdragons and roses.

Maj. Lee B. James acted as best man and ushers were Maj. Richard T. Batson, Capt. John Seed and Lieut. Robert B. McNeil. A reception followed at The Admiral Club.

After a honeymoon in the Poconos, the couple will reside at Fort McPherson, Ga.

The bride, granddaughter of former Engineer Commissioner and Mrs. C. W, Kutz and Col. and Mrs. Tenney Ross, is a graduate of William and Mary College, Major Karrick, graduated from the United States Military Academy in the class of January, 1943, served in Europe with the Thirteenth Armored Division and in China as aide de camp to Lieut. Gen. A. C. Gillem, jr.

Meyers-Vogel Troth Revealed at Party

The engagement of their daughter, Miss Lois Ruth Meyers, to Bertram Marvin Vogel has been announced by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Meyers of Washington. Mr. Vogel is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Vogel, also of Washington.

The announcement was made at a cocktail party given by the bride-elect's parents. Both Miss Meyers and Mr. Vogel attended George Washington University. During the war, Mr. Vogel served in the Navy two years in the Pacific and Atlantic theaters.

No date has been set for the wedding.

Miss Murnane, Lt. McClure, Wed

The wedding of Miss Jeanne Marie Murnane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James J. Murnane, Chevy Chase, and Lieut. Richard A. McClure, USA, son of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Robert A. McClure, New York, took place at high noon yesterday in the Fort Myer Chapel.

The bride was gowned in white satin with full-length veil falling from a twisted satin coronet. She carried white roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Rita E. Murnane was maid of honor for her sister and a cousin, Miss Patricia Murnane, and Miss Margaret M. Giegengach, were bridesmaids.

General McClure served his son as best man, and ushers were Col. William D. Eckert, Capt. Robert D. McClure, Capt. James J. Murnane, John F. Murnane and Lawrence Hufty. The reception was held at the Army War College Officers' Club.

After a motor trip through the Shenandoah Valley, Lieutenant and Mrs. McClure will make their home at Randolph Field, San Antonio, Tex.

Diplomatic Circling

By Elizabeth Maguire

CHIEF topic among diplomats during the past week was the weather. One night a storm smashed the glass patio of the Spanish Embassy. Rose petals scattered like confetti, and a fountain juggled hail stones big as tennis balls. The following night a heat wave was upon us.

No matter what remote desert a diplomat may come from, nor how near the equator his home, he will mop his brow and say, "At home, it's never like this." Iraq, Iran, the Lebanon or Afghanistan are air cooled compared with D. C., say the diplomats from those countries.

THE MINISTER of Iceland combined business with pleasure when he left by plane last Tuesday to consult with his government and do some salmon fishing on the Haffjartara River. The river, which is owned by the Minister's family, runs through southwest Iceland. Young Thor Thors, jr., went along and will remain in Iceland for the summer. The Minister will return in two weeks.

HRH Prince Nawas Al-Saud, age 14, flew in from Saudi-Arabia on Tuesday. The Minister of Saudi-Arabia, Asad Al-Faqih, was at LaGuardia Airport to meet the prince and his accompanying attendants. The young visitor is expected in Washington some time this week.

Another diplomatic son in the news is Seamus Patrick Nunan, son of the Irish Minister and Mrs. Nunan. One of the youngest in the class, he received his M. D. at Georgetown University last Monday.

Celebrating the eighty-ninth birthday of their King, the Swedish Minister and Mme. Erickson will be hosts at a reception at the Legation tomorrow. Embassy staff members and their wives, and members of the Swedish colony will attend.

Jean Monnet, author of the French Reconstruction Plan, is expected in Washington soon.

The retiring Ambassador of the Netherlands and Mme. Loudon are being widely entertained as the time draws near to say goodby. Last Monday they were honored by the Ambassador of Brazil and Mme. Martins. On Wednesday they will be entertained by the Ambassador of the Philippines, Joaquin M. Elizalde.

The new Ambassador of Paraguay, G. Enciso Velloso, arrived in town Thursday afternoon, accompanied by his wife, sister and two children.

Senorita Blanca de Espinosa de los Monteros graduated from Flintridge Sacred Heart Academy in Los Angeles, Calif., last week, and her father, the Ambassador of Mexico, was there to congratulate her. Senora de Espinosa and daughter, Antonieta, also attended the graduation.

The Minister of Finland, Dr. K. T. Jutila, is leaving tomorrow to attend the 200th anniversary of Princeton University. On behalf of the Finland Academy of Science, of which he is a member, he will deliver a congratulatory address.

The First Secretary of the Portuguese Embassy, Manuel Rocheta, has been promoted to the rank of Counselor.

Peace Group To Hold Gala Garden Party

A garden party with door prizes, music, ballet and other entertainment will be given by the Women's Action Committee for Lasting Peace on Wednesday, from 5 to 7, at the home of Mrs. Martin Vogel, 2601 30th st.

Mrs. Robert Low Bacon and Mrs. J. Borden Harriman are cochairmen of patrons, who include Senator Spessard Holland, Senator and Mrs. Carl Hatch, Senator Arthur Capper, Senator Robert Wagner, William Jennings Bryan Dorn and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph R. Bryson, Mrs. Morris Cafritz, Mrs. James Houghteling, Mrs. Paul McNutt, Mrs. George Maurice Morris, Mrs. Gifford Pinchot, Mrs. Battaile Railley and Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg.

Mrs. Lorton Sims is chairman of hostesses, and among those who will preside at the punchbowls are Mrs. Dean Acheson, Mrs. Clinton Anderson, Mrs. Harold Burton, Mrs. William Clayton, Mrs. Tom Connally, Mrs. William Fulbright, Mrs. Chester Nimitz, Mrs. Carl Spaatz, Mrs. Fred Vinson and Mrs. Ellen Woodward. Miss Utha Gray Smith is chairman of arrangements and entertainment.

The little symphony of the Army Air Forces Band will play and Zina Oubarova (Princes Zinaida Wolkonsky) well-known teacher of classical ballet, will give two of her own interpetrations of Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata" and Saint-Saens' "The Swan."

Mme. Ouzarova, who directed her own ballet company in Europe, has appeared with striking success at the Opera and the Champs Elysees Theater in Paris, and in New York. She will be accompanied by John B. Carroll who will also contribute two piano solos.

There will be fortune tellers and little Bobbie Goodfellow, champion drum major, will exhibit his skill and draw the lucky prize numbers.

Tickets can be obtained from Mrs. Richard Peyton Whiteley, 2915 Woodland dr. In the event of rain the party will be postponed to the following day.

Gholson Paintings On Exhibit Here

Miss Margaret Louise O'Brien has issued invitations for an exhibition of paintings by Sam Gholson, tomorrow, from 4 to 7 o'clock, at the Women's City Club. The portrait of Miss O'Brien by the artist will be unveiled at this time by Mrs. Paul Fleming-Holland.

Miss O'Brien will receive, assisted by Mrs. Frederick L. Anderson, Mrs. G. Gilmer Easley and Mrs. Margaret Hayes Sebree. Those who will take turns pouring tea include Mrs. Edward Everett Gann, Mrs. Clark Howell Woodward, Mrs. James Souby, Mrs. Gardiner Luce and Mrs. Jarvis Butler 3d.

Mrs. Villaret Plans Holiday In Europe

Mrs. Eugene Villaret is holiday bound. She will leave today for New York to sail on the America on Wednesday for Europe. She will visit the Countess de Marenches at her Normandy chateau and also friends in Paris and Belgium.

Mrs. Villaret saw her son, Eugene jr., married in Indianapolis in April, then returned to Washington to welcome Colonel Villaret home from foreign duty.

The marriage of Miss Betty Davis, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Chester Davis of Indianapolis, and Eugene Villaret jr., culminated a romance when both were students at Franklin College. The institution was founded by the Eugene jr's., great-great-grandfather, Judge Jesse Lynch Holman, Supreme Court Judge of Indiana. Young Mr. Villaret had served two years as a paratrooper in Europe before returning to college last fall.

Colonel Villaret left Washington in 1941, saw service in the Pacific area for three years and after a brief tour of duty in Washington was sent to Europe. He is now on leave.

Margaret Moreell Is Visiting Here

OUTFITTERS TO GENTLEWOMEN SINCE 1903

Frederick Finkenstaedt Weds Miss Kitchin at St. Alban's

ST. ALBAN'S CHURCH, decorated with white lilies, was the setting for the wedding yesterday of Miss Sara Jane Kitchin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mills Kitchin, and Frederick Birney Finkenstaedt, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Finkenstaedt. The Rev. Malcolm Marshall officiated.

The bride's gown was of ice blue satin made with tight bodice, sweetheart neckline and long sleeves ending in pointed cuffs. Her ice blue net coronet headdress was tipped with seed pearls and from it fell an ice blue tulle veil, fingertip length. She carried a bouquet of white roses and stephanotis with a white orchid center. Mr. Kitchin gave his daughter in marriage.

Miss Betty Owen, maid of honor, wore a white tissue taffeta gown with square neckline. Her cap sleeves and a full skirt caught into a bustle. She carried blue delphinium to match the garland in her hair.

Other attendants were Mrs. Charles Whitney Price and Miss Sophie Finkenstaedt, sisters of the bridegroom; Mrs. Richard Luther, Miss Lillian Leverton, all of Washington; Miss Ann Josey and Mrs. Herbert Johnson, jr., of Scotland Neck, N. C.

Gowned Like Bride

They wore gowns like that of the maid of honor, carried blue delphiniums and white peonies and wore bandeaux of the same flowers in their hair.

Douglas Nichols, jr., of High Point, N. C., was best man and ushers included Lieut. (j. g.) James G. Hilton, Alfred Coyle, Thomas Ennis of New York; Douglas Allen of Winchester, Va.; Alfred Staloff of Philadelphia; Robert Simmons, Byron E. Hinton, jr., Charles W. Price, Gordon Dickey, all of Washington, and Frederick Hicks of Englewood, N. J.

A reception at 2400 Sixteenth st., followed the ceremony. For the wedding trip Mrs. Finkenstaedt wore a white, raw silk suit with gold and brown accessories. They will live in New Haven, Conn., while the bridegroom finishes law school this summer. They will return in October to make their home in Georgetown.

Congressman's Kin

The bride is the granddaughter of the late Representative Claude Kitchin of North Carolina, and a niece of William Walton Kitchin, former Representative from North Carolina and a one-time Governor of the State. She is a graduate of St. Mary's Junior College, Raleigh, N. C., and of George Washington University. She made her debut in Raleigh.

Mr. Finkenstaedt attended St. Alban's School, is a graduate of Princeton, and is studying law at Yale University. During the war he served as a volunteer in the Italian, French and German campaigns. He is a member of Phi Delta Phi legal fraternity; Princeton Club of New York; Chevy Chase Club and the Pine Orchard Club, Pine Orchard, Conn.

Jean Fleming, Mr. Larner Wed In Newark, N. J.

The marriage of Miss Jean Mildred Fleming, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Barber Fleming, Springfield, N. J., to G. deFreest Larner of Causein Manor, Bel Alton, Md., formerly of Washington, took place yesterday in Franklin Memorial Methodist Church, Newark, N. J. The Rev. Harold A. Gamblin officiated and a small reception followed at the Hotel Suburban in Summit.

The bride wore a gown of white crepe embroidered in gold with lace mitts and hat and carried a bouquet of gardenias, stephanotis and lilies of the valley. Mrs. Walter Corwin Hitchcock, matron of honor for her cousin, was costumed in coral jersey and carried blue delphinium and Picardy gladioli. Robert J. Larner was his brother's best man and Richard B. Downing, jr., ushered.

The bride was graduated from Syracuse University. Mr. Larner, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Robert Martin Larner of Washington and New York, is a graduate of Lawrenceville School and Columbia University. He served as a colonel in the Army Air Forces. After a wedding trip, the couple will live in Pittsburgh.

ACCOMPANIED by farewell and welcome parties, there's some redeployment going on in the plans and operations division, War Department General Staff, of which Maj. Gen. Lauris Norstad is director.

Brig. Gen. and Mrs. George A. Lincoln and their three children will leave shortly for West Point, where the general will join the faculty of the department of social science. He'll be succeeded here by Gen. Courtland V. R. Schuyler, who is returning from overseas duty.

Lieut. Col. J. E. Bastion, jr. is replacing Col. John Steele as executive to General Norstad. Colonel and Mrs. Steele will depart late this week for Newport, R. I., where the colonel will attend the Naval War College. This evening, "from 6 on," the Steeles will be hosts to about 80 guests at a goodby cocktail party at their home in Arlington.

Lieut. Col. and Mrs. Charles Sanford also will leave the Capital soon, bound for the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and Col. and Mrs. Robert Wood will go to the National War College here.

Dunn-Burnett Engagement Is Announced

Mr. and Mrs. William McKee Dunn of Washington and Hot Springs, Va., announce the engagement of their daughter, Harriet Hildreth, to Gilbert Burnett, jr., son of Judge Gilbert Burnett, director of law at Louisville, Ky., and Mrs. Burnett.

Miss Dunn was graduated from St. Timothy's School, Catonsville, Md., and from Bryn Mawr College in 1944. Following that she worked for the Military Intelligence Service of the War Department. She is a member of the Colony Club of New York.

The prospective bride is a granddaughter of the late Jesse L. Eddy, and Mrs. Eddy, of New York and Morristown, N. J., and of the late Mr. and Mrs. Lanier Dunn. Her great grandfather, the late Gen. William McKee Dunn, was in Congress from Indiana and was later Judge Advocate General of the United States Army. Miss Dunn is directly descended from James F. D. Lanier of Indiana and New York, eminent banker and financier.

Mr. Burnett was graduated from Princeton, class of 1943, where he was a member of Cap and Gown Club. He was a first lieutenant of infantry during the war, serving with the Office of Strategic Services in Asia and later in Military Intelligence Service, War Department General Staff. He is a member of the Pendennis Club of Louisville. The late Judge Theodore L. Burnett, last surviving member of the Confederate Congress, is his great grandfather.

TOWN TALK

they had seen in years and they wanted it more than they had ever wanted anything, except maybe peace! But the price was enormous and they had no money at all.

It was spring and they were young. They had an idea! The hills outside the town were covered with crocuses. They walked the whole way to pick them and bring them back.

They stood in the street holding the blossoms and people crowded around saying, "How beautiful!" and "Where did you get them?" It was the first glimpse of anything beautiful in a very long time!

Timidly the sisters answered, "We got them in the hills and we're selling them." No sooner said than sold, and no sooner sold than the profits were turned over to the chocolate vendors.

Soon little Miss Mariassy will be looking for another way to earn her chocolate, though for the moment she's finishing some work for Minister Szegedy-Maszak and she's not homeless because Mrs. Szegedy-Maszak has asked her to stay with them.

And that money earned picking crocuses in Budapest has gone to her head. She says she wants to go to Canada and chop wood.

Miss Florence Jean Frey, daughter of Mrs. Jean Falconer Frey, Arlington, Va., exchanged marriage vows yesterday with Leander Russell Hathaway, jr., son of Col. and Mrs. R. Hathaway, at present in China. The ceremony, performed by the Rev. Hedley Williams, took place in St. George's Episcopal Church, Arlington.

The bride, escorted by her grandfather, Archer E. Falconer, wore a long-sleeved gown of white slipper satin with seed pearl collar and veil held by a spray of white flowers. She carried a prayer book covered with white rosebuds. Her attendants were Mrs. W. Dwight Barrell, sister of the bridegroom, matron of honor, Mrs. James Spelman, Miss Joanne Turney and Miss Beverly Ewing. All were costumed in white tissue taffeta with net jackets and carried roses and delphinium.

W. Dwight Barrell acted as best man. Serving as ushers were Hugh C. Falconer, uncle of the bride; Herbert Hathaway, uncle of the bridegroom, and John Ford Sperry. Roy A. Fuller was ringbearer.

Berryman—Holden

In Georgetown Presbyterian Church yesterday afternoon Miss Mary Kathryn Holden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. D. Holden of Clarksburg, Md., became the bride of Richard B. Berryman, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Berryman of Alexandria.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore white taffeta and carried a white prayer book showered with gardenias and stephanotis. Mrs. Amy Lee Holden, matron of honor, wore white marquisette and carried a colonial bouquet. Miss Mary Lou Lansdale, Mrs. Lucille B. Michel and Miss Francis Hufford also attended the bride. Harvey Seabrooke was best man, and ushers were Gordon Grimwood, Richard Wilkinson and Forrest D. Holden.

Henderson—McGowan

Miss Shirley Anne McGowan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis A. McGowan of Washington, was married yesterday to Warren Ashley Henderson, son of Mrs. Ella Henderson of Washington. The ceremony took place in St. Ann's Rectory.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore white organdy and carried orchids and lilies of the valley. Her veil of illusion was fastened to a braided net halo with seed pearl flowers.

Miss Marilyn Fink was maid of honor. Miss Margaret Emory and Miss Gloria Rocha were bridesmaids. Jerome G. Henderson, brother of the bridegroom, served as best man.

Walbridge—Sailor

White flowers and candlelight decorated the Chapel of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church yesterday for the wedding of Miss Mary Lou Sailor and John Tuthill Walbridge, jr. Mrs. Walbridge is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Vance Laird Sailor of Washington, and her husband is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Tuthill Walbridge of Lake Bluff, Ill.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a dress of white organza with a finger-tip veil held by a coronet of seed pearls. Her flowers were a bouquet of white roses.

Mrs. Richard Lagergren was matron of honor, and Miss Margaret Brown was flower girl. Ted Fordney served as best man, and the ushers were Frank Gillis, Robert Wells, Joseph Wilcox and Vance Lewis Sailor, brother of the bride.

Wright—Hall

The marriage of Miss Barbara Anita Hall and Donald Wright took place yesterday in St. Alban's Episcopal Church, with the Rev. Malcolm Marshall officiating. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Florence Ballinger Hall and George Thomas Hall and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Lloyd Wright, all of Washington.

Ecorted by her uncle, Thomas Baker Robinson, the bride wore a white marquisette gown with bustle back and square yoke edged in lace. She carried a prayer book covered with white gladioli and on the halo which held her finger-tip veil were arranged orange blossoms which had been worn by her aunt, Mrs. Robinson, and by the bridegroom's mother.

Mrs. Harold Wade Hiller, cousin of the bridegroom, was matron of honor and Miss Julianne Hall attended her sister as maid of honor. Both were dressed in pink marquisette trimmed with lace and carried bouquets of pastel flowers. Richard Hamilton Wright served his brother as best man. Ushers were Donald Lee McKinney, Arthur Chilton Farnham, William Mason Tate and Lieut. Harold Wade Hiller, USN.

RUTH BALDWIN COWAN
. . . Heads Women's National Press Club

ONE day, while covering the war front in North Africa, a petite, blonde girl was offered a foxhole. Despite the danger from bombs, she refused, and requested a tent instead. There was a spider in the foxhole! Ruth Baldwin Cowan, newly elected president of the Women's National Press Club, was the girl.

An Associated Press reporter, she was one of the first women journalists on the Normandy beachhead and among the first the Army sent overseas. When German submarines were still devastating Allied convoys on the Atlantic, she accompanied the first contingent of Wacs to North Africa on a troop transport in January, 1943.

Took Things in Stride

From Africa she followed the war to the British Isles, France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Luxembourg, cheerfully taking the hardships of a war correspondent.

Once she had to dive into a bomb crater for safety, when German planes dropped bombs on St. Lo, France. Asked about how she felt, she remarked, "Shucks! The nearest I came to getting hurt was when I slipped on the soapy bathroom floor of my London flat."

Ruth volunteered for the exciting, but difficult job of a war correspondent, leaving behind a comfortable desk position with the Associated Press bureau here. In Washington she covered the White House, wrote color stories on Congress, and reported women's activities. Back at her desk now, you'll find her on beats ranging from the War Department to Daughters of the American Revolution conventions.

Although she keeps all male competitors stepping, Ruth has never become masculine in her manner or dress. That she is essentially feminine is proved by an episode, which she describes amusingly in a book, "Deadline Delayed," written by members of the Overseas Press Club in America.

In 1942, when the War Department informed her that she was to check in a port of embarkation within 72 hours, the first thing she thought about was going to a beauty parlor. So promptly she contracted for a shampoo, hairset, manicure, etc. How to stay blonde during the war was her big problem.

Bleach-Head Blonde

The next day she bought 12 bottles of bleach and had the beauty shop operator teach her how to apply it. And apply it she did from North Africa to the Normandy beachhead.

By the time she had reached Carentan, she says that her hair was definitely at the "give-away stage." Swallowing her vanity, she finally enlisted the aid of Lois Duncan of Detroit and New York, an American Red Cross social worker. She took the bottle of bleach and borrowed helmets from sleeping night-shift nurses. They heated water over logs and filled the helmets. Their beauty operation then began.

Lois of Poise

After carefully reading directions, Lois applied the bleach with Ruth's only tooth brush.

Suddenly Lois became tense. "I hope nothing is wrong," she told Ruth. "Maybe you'd better take a look." Upon examining the wet hair, Ruth discovered it had turned purple. After much soaking and rinsing, the purple hue disappeared. Using some lemon crystals that a sympathetic GI cook had given her, to cut the soap, she set her hair. She was satisfied that she was blonde enough to match her military credentials.

Born in Salt Lake City, Ruth grew up in Homestead, Fla., and San Antonio, Tex. After graduating from the University of Texas, she finished high school and college in five years, and took a short fling at school marming.

When she discovered that a reporter friend got free movie passes, she bade adieu to history instructing. She persuaded the editor to let her do a weekly movie column. Then came general assignments. She got an opportunity to cover a good story for United Press, and later was sent to Austin, Tex., to cover a legislative session.

Knowing that men generally get choicer and easier assignments, Ruth used her middle name, Baldwin, when she applied to the United Press for a job. She got the job. But one day she answered the telephone and an important out-of-town executive learned that his woman-shy outfit had hired a girl. She was no longer with them after that.

"At the close of the legislative session," she said, "I wrote the Associated Press in New York that the United Press had made a mistake and fired me, and I believed that the Associated Press should add me to its staff of a few women. It did."

Assigned to the Associated Press bureau in Chicago, she covered the Al Capone trial, plus some of gangland's biggest funerals. In 1936 she was assigned the Landon presidential campaign, reporting on the activities of Mrs. Landon in Topeka and in Colorado. And in 1940 she was transferred to the Washington staff. She covered the woman's angle at both the Republican and Democratic national conventions in 1940. She was first to break the story that Henry Wallace was President Roosevelt's choice for Vice President. Going on to Indiana, she reported Wendell Willkie's nomination as Republican presidential candidate.

Ruth possesses a keen sense of humor, is an entertaining conversationalist, telling the best jokes at her own expense.

Soroptomists Celebrate Silver Annivrsary

Washington Soroptimist Club celebrated its silver anniversary last night with a reception and gala banquet at the Statler Hotel.

"A Silver Anniversary" motif predominated in decorations.

Heading the program was installation of the club's new officers.

Organized here in 1922 with a membership of 100, the club is composed of executives, business and professional women in the District. Active charter members of the club at present include Miss Helen V. Barnhart, Miss Mattie V. Gibson, Miss Nora B. Huffman, Mrs. Mary Catherine Lewis, Miss Dora Palkin, Mrs. Marie H. Pierce, Mrs. Eva J. Turner and Dr. Lulu I. Waters.

Many Civic Projects

During its early years, the club's civic work consisted of such projects as installing libraries in hospitals and other institutions in the District; providing radio sets and earphones for residents at the Blue Plains Home for the Aged.

Branching out during and since the war, its civic work covered a varied field, such as contributions to the Red Cross, Community Chest, Children's Hospital, National Symphony Orchestra, D. C. Tuberculosis Association, Readers' Digest in Braille for the Blind, Mile of Dimes and Barney Neighborhood House.

Other Accomplishments

Other projects included presentation of a radio-victrola to the Florence Crittenden Home, a piano for the mental ward at Gallinger Hospital; cigarette cases to 75 patients at Walter Reed Hospital; 11 scholarships plus an achievement award to Miss Sibyl Baker, and 10 key awards to local high school students.

Mrs. Rose Robison Cowen was installed as president, taking over the gavel from Mrs. Zada Daniels.

Others inaugurated were Miss A. Olivia Nicoll, first vice president; Mrs. Elizabeth M. Perkins, second vice president; Mrs. Edith Claude Jarvis, corresponding secretary; Miss Beulah M. Hall, recording secretary; Miss Mary Elisabeth Mersheimer, treasurer; Mrs. Marie Collier Rogers, Miss Gertrude Veronica Sullivan and Miss Ella C. Werner as members of the board of directors.

Members of the banquet committee included Miss Mary Elizabeth Turner, chairman; Miss Agnes E. Cady, Miss Rhea I. Fulgham, Mrs. Loraine Leese Good, Mrs. Edna A. Hinkle, Miss Mersheimer, Mrs. Perkins, Mrs. Rogers, Miss Sullivan, Miss Margaret Ellen Swanson, Mrs. Eva J. Turner and Miss Estelle Virginia Zirkin.

Gray Hair?

Simply wet it with Canute Water

A few applications will completely re-color it similar to its former natural shade. IN ONE DAY — IF YOU WISH. Then primp just once a month and KEEP it young-looking. Canute Water is not a tint or rinse that washes off. Shampooing actually improves the rich, warm new color and leaves your hair fresh, clean and natural to the touch. You may even curl it or get a permanent, if you wish.

Leading dealers in most of America's largest cities sell more Canute Water than all other hair colorings combined!

No other product can make all these claims

Dads and Sons Both Point With Pride

on the bird after he shoots it. The same is true of his 14-year-old son, David.

Nothing is more highly prized by either than their gun collections. In the library "arsenal" of their attractive Chevy Chase home, each has his favorite weapons and both know about all there is to know about drawing a bead. Senator Hickenlooper began early teaching Dave the marksman's art.

"Now," the Senator said, "he rewards me by often beating me and he handles a gun more safely than I do."

Father and son are both "Mr. Fixits," Mrs. Hickenlooper says. At their joint workbench in the basement of their home, the "boys" make hunting knives, repair radios and take on any like problems.

Like his dad before him, David is a catcher of his junior high school baseball team. This year he won his letter as center on the Sidwell Friends Football Team.

With 18-year-old Jane, a graduate of Cathedral School this year, making a foursome, the Hickenloopers spend summer vacations together at Clear Lake, Iowa.

Some More Chips

KNOWN as the tallest man in Congress, Representative Charles Fletcher from San Diego, Calif., stands 6-feet-3 in his stocking feet. There's plenty of competition in the family, however, for son "Kim," Stanford University student, goes his dad 1 inch better, while 16-year-old Pete measures 6-feet-2 and is still growing.

It's "like father, like son" all the way through this family. All three men are cracks shots, avid fishermen and champion swimmers. In 1923 "dad" set the national and world record for the breast stroke. Kim is now San Diego's champion for the same stroke and Pete already has established a record for the backstroke.

One of 10 children in a family famed for its boundless energy, Congressman Fletcher served as a Navy lieutenant in the last war, and is as agile as his youngest daughter Dale, who is 9 years old.

Experts on good fishing spots, the Fletchers report that although local streams may not exactly compare with some in California, they "aren't bad." Their favorite haunts nearby include Big Hunting Creek near Thurmont, Md., Hughes, Va., and Rapidan, Va.

Son "Kim" who has been serving with the Army Engineer Corps for the last 17 months, is now studying business administration in college. Pete, who, like his dad, loves the outdoors, would like forestry as a profession, has his eye on a Western ranger job for next summer.

The Fletcher youngsters are 3 of 27 grandchildren on their father's side. The Congressman's parents, now in their seventies, spend most of their time traveling. They just returned from a trip to South America.

AT 6½, Johnny Butcher, "Marine, jr., son of Col. and Mrs. Joseph O. Butcher, already is treading in his father's footsteps. As a public information officer of the Marine Corps, the colonel seems to have passed his talents on to his young son.

A columnist in the Butcher Bugle, a newspaper letter which the family prints periodically for their friends all over the world, "Little Butch," as he is called, keeps readers informed of his doings. "Gardening with dad" is now one of his principal occupations at their home at 2221 Observatory pl. nw. Also a contributor to his school paper, "Little Butch" has sounded off in verse concerning his and his father's favorite transportation—boats.

TRICKS FOR TEENS

By Nancy Pepper

You who wear your bathing suits parted in the middle will be interested in a letter of protest we received from a Cincinnati, Ohio, teen-ager. And we quote: "In writing this letter I am representing 3000 girls in Cincinnati, Ohio. We have formed an organization to combat immodesty in dress. Our first step is to eliminate two-piece bathing suits. We already have the support of one of the largest department stores in our city. Would you cooperate with us by discarding all advertising material for two-piece bathing suits? If you heed this petition you are gratifying 3000 girls of Cincinnati."

Well, isn't it about time you wore bathing suits to swim IN and not OUT of—or will you continue to Grin and Bare it?

Stick Your Neck Out

Now that those swoop neck peasant blouses are swingin' low again, you're busy devising new sorcery for your swanlike necks. Try some of these for size and let us know how you like them. What's even more important, let us know how he likes you when you wear 'em.

NATIONAL VELVET—From coast to coast you're tying black velvet ribbons around your necks and trimming them up with everything from pearls from that old broken necklace to tiny fake flowers, sewn flat. You like little pearl buttons for a tailored effect; you love sequins for scintilation. Even newer is the trick of sewing little silver charms around your necklet, in dangling effect.

TAG TRICK—Just for the fun of it, you're removing those big "I Love You" (in 15 different languages, mind you) dog tags from your bracelets and wearing them on that black ribbon around your neck.

EARRING AIRING—The newest spot for your earrings is on a black velvet band around your neckline. Ditto for your baby ring, and, if you're lucky, for his class ring.

RUFF STUFF—For a lacy luster, thread narrow velvet ribbon through a piece of eyelet ruffling that has beading through center or top and tie around your neck with bow and long streamers down back.

Silent Partner

You can lead a horse to water, but you cannot make him drink;
You may think you have him broken,'til you get him to the brink—
And it's likewise with a boy, let me tell you in advance,
You can lead him to a party—BUT YOU CANNOT MAKE HIM DANCE.

Hot Weather Hair-Do

No need to torture yourself all night and disfigure yourself all day with curlers now that you've latched on to the new summer hair-do's. You need a long mane, but not necessarily a wavy one, to achieve them. And you need lots of brushing to give them the polish of perfection.

HORSE TAILS—That's the name you give the new fashion of drawing your hair tight back and up into a rubber band and letting it fall down the back like a horse tail. Nothing could be easier; nothing could be more Cover-Girlish.

SEVERELY YOURS—You draw your hair back into a 6-inch gold metal barette and let the ends hang down like a chignon (that's a bun, son). The smoother the swoonier. For dress-up you stick a flower or two through the barette.

MAIDS IN BRAIDS—Nothing could be easier to manage than pigtails, and the new combination is straight bangs across the front, pigtails down the sides. For glamour, braid colored kerchiefs, pearls or flowers into your pigtails. For fun wire 'em to stand out. For sound effects, tie little bells on the ends.

CREAM OF WIT

WHAT ARE THE SEVEN STAGES OF A PIN-UP GIRL?

1. Safety pins. 2. Bobby pins. 3. Sorority pins. 4. Diamond pins. 5. Rolling pins. 6. Clothes pins. 7. Safety pins.

WHY IS A WOLF LIKE A TRAIN?

Because you like to hear the whistle, even if you're not going anywhere.

WHAT IS A PEDESTRIAN?

A man with a son who is 17 or over. (And if you don't get that one, you haven't an O. A. O. who is always borrowing dad's car).

WHAT DID THEY SAY ABOUT THOSE BLONDES WHO MADE SUCH A FUSS AT THE BASEBALL GAME?

The bleachers went wild.

Well, how are things in Glocca, Moron?

SEW SILLY

Anybody can buy a few yards of fabric and make an outfit, but it takes teens to do it the hard way. Here's your latest needle nudgin' nonsense, as reported by our Hi-Style Scouts.

IN THE BAG—Believe it or not, we hear that teens are converting large laundry bags into strapless bloomer playsuits. They cut two slits in the bottom to stick their legs through, they tie the drawstring top around them and they fasten a belt around the middle. The results shouldn't give Lana Turner anything to worry about.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl, 18, Whose Parents Are Dead, Finds Herself Involved in Triangle; She Loves Man Whose Wife Left Him, Then Came Back

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have somehow got myself involved in a troublesome triangle. As my parents are dead, I don't know where to turn or whom to ask for help, except yourself.

I am 18 years old and quite some time ago I met a very nice young man, now 22. We were never very friendly until his wife left him to get a divorce. Then he and I begin seeing a lot of each other. Soon we found ourselves much in love and were making plans for the future.

He makes a good salary, has a nice car and a swell apartment and we have a great deal in common.

This Is Wife's Third Marriage

THE DIVORCE was going swimmingly, we thought, when suddenly his wife returned with her mother. Now she says she is going to contest it. She was married twice before. Dick (my friend) is her third husband. She deserted her first two husbands and, in fact, married the second before her divorce decree was final.

This is the second time she has left Dick and gone back to him; and there has been no love on his part since her recent return. She knows nothing about me yet. I have never been married, but I am sure I want Dick for my husband. We have everyone's blessing and are earnestly devoted to each other.

In the circumstances, what should Dick do? And what should I do? Please help me. I will follow your advice completely, because I respect your opinions and think it's wonderful how you've helped others. Sincerely,

J. F.

Girl's Slant Is Confusing

DEAR J. F.: You speak of Mrs. Dick's leaving to get a divorce and later coming back to "contest" it. I don't see how she could "contest" her own suit. She might withdraw it, if she has decided to feed on Dick's resources again for a while.

But in that case, since she has twice deserted him, surely he could start proceedings against her and win his freedom without much difficulty—provided he wants it and hasn't condoned her latest offense by resuming marital relations since her recent return.

Her serial record of marrying, divorcing and doing "rehearsal" disappearances to harass each husband in turn would weigh heavily against her if Dick went to court with his tale of woe in relation to her and sued for deliverance,—establishing the fact that after leaving him twice, she is back again uninvited, a distracting troublemaker on his premises, playing havoc with his best efforts to get his life on an orderly basis.

Man Needs Legal Aid

I DARESAY any good lawyer in your community could win a victory for Dick in the circumstances; and since Dick commands a substantial salary he ought to hire legal help in this emergency—the best obtainable.

Assuming his wife won't budge from his apartment, doubtless his attorneys would explore the feasibility of his moving out on grounds of "constructive desertion" under their aegis—until the case is settled, common property divided and Mrs. Dick thereby evacuated from her dog-in-the-manger position, if such it is.

So much for what Dick ought to do. Now, about you: Since your parents are dead and you are only 18, you need a disinterested mature-age "next friend" to act in a parent's stead. That is, some reputable counselor thereabouts, to hear your story, help you clarify your thinking about the triangle; and, if need be, testify to the innocent character of your mistake in getting emotionally involved with Dick—when you assumed his freedom was a foregone conclusion.

Build Defense Of Reputation

THIS FORM of protection is advisable against the possibility that Mrs. Dick might learn of your love for each other, put an ugly construction on your recent companionship and try unscrupulously to make capital of it, to your detriment, in the event Dick insists on divorce.

Choose a clergyman as your counselor, since the function of the ministry is to be wise, discreet and sympathetic in establishing a protective confidential relationship with troubled youth. Maybe you have no church affiliation. If not, now is the time to make one, using this problem as introduction to the pastor.

Put your best cloth forward for the bride's table! A lustrous kid-textured Irish linen in a lacy scroll and satin band design is a good choice for the formal wedding breakfast. The over-hang should be equal at sides and ends and should fall from 12 to 18 inches below the table top. A wedding cake wreathed in maiden hair fern and flanked by white tapers in flower-decorated crystal candlesticks makes a decorative centerpiece

Your Questions on Homemaking

Can you tell me how to remove a stain of sun tan lotion from a 100 per cent wool bathing suit? S.

Loosen the stain by rubbing a little lard or colorless vaseline into it. Allow this to stand for 30 minutes and then sponge with carbon tetrachloride. Work from the wrong side of the material in order to push dirt and grease out. Use light brushing motions, working from the outside of the spot toward the center. If this treatment doesn't do the job completely, soak your suit for 30 minutes in a solution of 2 tablespoons of hydrogen peroxide to 1 gallon of water. Rinse twice.

Can you tell me how to clean a pink ostrich feather which has become badly soiled? M. E. H.

Ostrich feathers are not cleaned successfully at home. I suggest you take it to a cleaner who makes a specialty of hat renovation.

I have a hat of white, heavy lacy straw which is slightly soiled and has become discolored from sunburn. A commercial cleaner whom I consulted could not guarantee to remove the discoloration. Have you any suggestions for restoring it to its original pure white? Would the same preparation work on a white panama? S. H. D.

Take your hat to a valet service specializing in hat renovation. I understand they have a method of bleaching straws to restore their pure white color.

The avocado—which end up? Covered with water? How much light? Should it be a seed from a ripe avocado? Thank you. I've tried four stones for two months each without a sprout! E. D. L.

Place the avocado with the pointed end in the water. Only the lower half of the seed should be in the water. Sprouting is speeded up by cutting just through the heavy outer covering of the seed of the end in the water. Place the seed in the dark until the roots form, then bring it to the light. The seed should be from a ripe avocado.

Can you tell me how to launder a butcher rayon and linen dress to restore the crispness as when new? The color is too dark to starch. Would also like to know if you can help me find someone who might have some odd pieces of "Albany" pattern Grindley Ware? Would like to complete my set started some years ago. H. C. W.

Put a little dye, the color of your dress, into the laundry starch to darken it before starching your dress.

Does anyone have any "Albany" pattern?

Recently painters left marks on highly polished floors and stair steps, very likely from rubber heels. Is there any way of removing such marks without washing or making use of scouring powder as the rest of the steps are not touched? K. W.

Rubber heel marks will come off by rubbing the spot with a cloth dampened with liquid wax or carbon tetrachloride.

Sorority Unit Raises Fund

The Washington Omicron chapter of Beta Sigma Phi held its last meeting before adjourning for the summer recently. Marcella Stabnow, newly elected president, presided. A fund for a summer camp trip for some worthy child from Washington Central Mission was established. Mary Smith directed the cultural program after the business meeting.

Mussey Tent to Meet

Mrs. Myrtle Burke, president, will preside at the meeting of the Ellen Spencer Mussey Tent No. 1, Daughters of Union Veterans of the Civil War. The meeting will be held tomorrow, 8 o'clock, at 2015 Massachusetts ave. nw.

Threadgill—Kemp

In a ceremony solemnized by the Rev. John Spence in St. Matthew's Cathedral yesterday, Miss Edith Marie Kemp, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ted Kemp, Winder, Ga., was married to Samuel J. Threadgill, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Threadgill, this city.

The bride, escorted by her father, wore a gown of white lace and marquisette with finger-tip veil and carried white roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Frances Cooper, maid of honor, was costumed in Nile green marquisette with yellow roses. Robert H. Threadgill was best man, and Albert Haynes and Thomas Kemp served as ushers.

Spano—Martin

In Northminster Presbyterian Church last evening, Miss Dorothy M. Martin, daughter of Harry Floyd Martin, Altoona, Pa., and the late Mrs. Martin, was married to Ralph Spano, son of Mr. and Mrs. Angelo Spano of Washington.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a white satin gown with long train and finger-tip veil attached to a Dutch cap of lace. Her bouquet was of white roses and lilies of the valley. Mrs. Nanette Catarinella, sister of the bridegroom, served as matron of honor. She was costumed in steel-blue tissue taffeta and carried yellow roses. Similarly gowned and carrying red roses were the bridesmaids, Mrs. Edna M. Johnstone, sister of the bride, and Miss Yolandy Manilli.

Roland Catarinella acted as best man. Harry Johnstone and Theodore Jeannette were ushers. A reception followed at Hotel 2400.

Houser—Mason

In Emmanuel Episcopal Church yesterday, Miss Sarah Margret Mason, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Carrington Mason, Newport News, Va., became the bride of Travis Lee Houser, son of Col. and Mrs. March Hugh Houser of Washington. The Rev. William Macbeth officiated.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a wedding gown of white batiste with bateau neckline and trimmed with eyelet lace. Her veil was of embroidered organdy and she carried white rambler roses. Mrs. Richard David Mason, matron of honor, was costumed in pink chambray and carried violets. Richard David Mason, brother of the bride, served as best man and another brother, Philip Benjamin Mason, was usher.

Grant—Lowe

Miss Helen Virginia Lowe, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Henderson Lowe of Arlington, became the bride yesterday of John Edward Pakenham Grant, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. P. Grant, also of Arlington. The ceremony took place in Christ Episcopal Church, Georgetown, the Rev. John R. Anschutz officiating.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore white satin, and a finger-tip veil of illusion held by a tiara of seed pearls. She carried a prayer book covered with a white orchid. Mrs. George Davis was matron of honor. Other attendants were Mrs. Fred Adams, Miss Clarice Ernst, Miss Margaret Lane and Miss Georgia Davis. The latter served as junior bridesmaid.

Henry P. Grant, brother of the bridegroom, was best man, and the ushers were Herbert Lowe, jr., brother of the bride, Herbert Marstetler and William Morehead.

Parties Crowd Social Slate Following Upperville Show

By Nina Carter Tabb

THIS JUNE weekend is always gayest in and around Upperville. There is the Upperville Colt and Horse Show, which is followed by entertainment for the many house guests.

The horse show, which began Friday and ended yesterday marked its fifty-third and most successful meeting. Large crowds gathered each day to applaud the many top thoroughbreds in the country. The oldest horse show in America, it has been held every year except during the Civil and the last World Wars. The late Col. Richard Dulany of Welbourne started the exhibitions in 1853.

Among those entertaining for their house guests this weekend were Dr. Archibald Cary Randolph, president of the show, on whose estate it is held. Dr. and Mrs. Randolph have as house guests his son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Archie Cary Randolph, jr., and their little daughter, Rebecca Ann of Miami Beach, Fla. Also guests of the Randolphs are his daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. William Beverley Mason, jr., of Washington and their children, Billy 3d, and Randolph.

During the recess hour of the horse show they entertained at luncheon.

Mrs. C. Oliver Iselin, Mrs. Daniel C. Sands, Mrs. Thomas Davis and Miss Charlotte H. Noland held a picnic lunch on the show grounds. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fletcher gave a luncheon during the recess hour at their home, the Maples.

Luncheon Hostesses

Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel H. Morison had as luncheon guests their daughter and Mrs. Poyntz Tyler of New York City; Mrs. Walter McK. Jones gave a luncheon at her home, Ayrshire, near Upperville. Mr. and Mrs. Charles V. B. Cushman entertained at a large cocktail party on Friday afternoon at their home, Windsor Farm, and there were any number of smaller parties.

Today Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Dulany Randolph are giving a luncheon at their home in honor of his brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Archie Cary Randolph, jr. There was a large subscription horse show dance held last evening at Buchanan Hall, Upperville. Music was furnished by Sydney's Orchestra of Washington. Two debutant parties also took place last evening when Mr. and Mrs. Albert Pope Hinckley and Mr. and Mrs. Juan Manuel Ceballos, presented to society their daughters, Miss Margaret Roberts Hinckley and Miss Eve Douglas Prime, at a dance at the Springs Field Club, near Warrenton. Mr. and Mrs. George Harrison Burwell gave a supper dance in honor of her daughter, Miss Julia Duval Beverley at the River House, in Clarke County, near Millwood.

Mr. and Mrs. Barrett H. Clark of Briarcliff Manor, N. Y., recently announced the engagement of their daughter, Nancy Barrett, to Frank Tournier Taliaferro of Annapolis, son of Col. and Mrs. Edward H. Taliaferro. A graduate of the University of North Carolina, he was a lieutenant in the Marine Corps during the war. The wedding will take place this evening at Briarcliff Manor.

Miss Dorothy Jane Krapf, daughter of Mrs. Albert Krapf of 318 West st., Annapolis, and the late Mr. Krapf, was married to Orville Lee Bowen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dell Bowen of Three-Mile Oak, at 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon in the College Avenue Baptist Church. The Rev. W. C. Wood, pastor of the church, officiated.

Comdr. Arthur E. Krapf came over from Arlington to escort his sister and give her in marriage. Mrs. Merle E. Cox, sister of the bride, was matron of honor, and Lester Bowen, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. The ushers included a brother-in-law of the bride, Merle Cox, James A. Wheeler, brother-in-law of the groom, Arthur Myers and Calvin Hardesty. Following the ceremony a reception was held in the recreation room of the church.

After a wedding trip to Atlantic City, the young couple will be at home at 318 West st.

Commodore Edward Lloyd, USN (ret.) was the host Thursday afternoon at a small party at his home on Prince George st. in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Glendenning, who, coming from Florida waters, are now on their way North aboard their yacht, the Mystic.

Hookers Honor Guests

Dr. and Mrs. Donald H. Hooker were hosts at a cocktail party on Sunday afternoon at their home on Cornhill street in honor of Dr. and Mrs. William J. French. Dr. French left this week for Ecuador, where he will serve for a month as a consultant on child health.

Miss Meredith Moon, the daughter of Mrs. Don P. Moon, of Weems Creek, and the late Rear Admiral Moon, USN, was the hostess on Saturday evening at an informal party for a number of her friends in celebration of her thirteenth birthday anniversary.

Lieut. (j.g.) Lloyd E. McCune, who has been with the Department of Foreign Languages at the Naval Academy, left yesterday for a visit with relatives in Cincinnati, following which he will embark for Spain. Lieutenant McCune is leaving the service and plans several years study at the University of Madrid.

Mrs. Thomas L. Iglehart of Maryland ave., has returned from a visit with her son-in-law and daughter, Capt. and Mrs. Kenneth Noble of Hull Sail on the Severn During June Week the Nobles had as house guests Admiral and Mrs. George Hussey, Admiral and Mrs. Malcolm Schoffle and Miss Betty Lou DeBois, all of Washington.

Lieut. Col. Lowell Edward English, USMC, and Mrs. English, of Perry Circle, are receiving congratulations on the birth of twins, Bruce Browning and Becky Lynne.

Women Fliers' Club Slates Flight Brunch

Wedding Bells Ring

Making their home at Newport, R. I., where the bridegroom is stationed, are Ensign Edward Coith Atkinson, USN, and the former Miss Laetitia Shelby Dickinson.

The bride is daughter of Capt. Spencer F. Dickinson, USN, and Mrs. Dickinson, Annapolis, and Ensign Atkinson is son of the late Rev. and Mrs. George H. Atkinson, Columbia, S. C. Their marriage took place May 24 in the Naval Academy Chapel at Annapolis.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore white satin, designed with circular train. Her finger-tip length veil was of illusion tulle and she carried a bouquet of roses and orchids. Miss Helene de Lone, maid of honor, wore yellow marquisette and her flowers were yellow roses and cornflowers.

Best man for his brother-in-law was Dwight Dickinson 3d, and ushers included Ensign John Collins, Ensign Richard Campbell, Ensign Harry Gerhard and Ensign Lou Brown.

Wolfe—Lundquist

In St. Andrew's Episcopal Church yesterday Miss Doris Helen Lundquist, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Arthur Lundquist, became the bride of Perce Leithcoe Wolfe, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Perce L. Wolfe of Riverdale, Md.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white slipper satin trimmed with seed pearls. Her finger-tip veil of illusion fell from a satin coronet trimmed with seed pearls, and she carried an arm bouquet of baby calla lilies.

Miss Frances Lundquist attended as maid of honor. Other bridal attendants were Miss Doris Gegan, Miss Virginia Stone, Miss Clara Widmayer and Miss Betty Monocrusos.

Mr. Wolfe was best man for his son, and the ushers were Michael Zetts, George Lundquist, William Coakley and Thomas Chisari.

MRS. PERCE L. WOLFE, JR.

Goodwin—Long

Miss Theodora E. Long and William W. Goodwin were married at St. Matthew's Lutheran Church, June 8. The Rev. Bernard J. Holm officiated. Mrs. Goodwin is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Long of Silver Hill, Md., and her husband is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Goodwin of Maryland.

Wearing a gown of satin and lace, the bride was given in marriage by her father. Her finger-tip veil of illusion was held by a cluster of orange blossoms and she carried white orchids on a white satin prayer book with streamers.

Miss Patricia Long was maid of honor for her sister, and Miss Catherine Marmo was bridesmaid. Both wore gowns of pink and blue organza, fashioned after the bride's, and carried bouquets of mixed summer blossoms. Sister of the bridegroom, Miss Peggy Goodwin, was flower girl.

Elmer Talbert was best man, and ushers were Eugene Hungerford and Eugene Bayles.

Smith—Bible

Making their home in Washington following a wedding trip to New Orleans and the Gulf Coast will be Mr. and Mrs. Jasper Campbell Smith, who were married on June 10 in the First Christian Church in Jackson, Miss. The bride is the former Miss Martha Jane Bible, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. N. Bible, Brandon, Miss., and her husband is the son of the Rev. and Mrs. B. T. Smith, Hollandale, Miss. The bridegroom's brother, the Rev. J. B. Smith, performed the ceremony and Mr. Bible gave his daughter in marriage.

The bride wore a gown of white embroidered eyelet mousseline de soie with close-fitting bodice, peplum and long, full sleeves. Her veil was held in place by twisted strands of pearls and she carried a white Bible with orchids.

Mrs. B. L. Hill, matron of honor for her sister, was costumed in lavender mousseline de soie fashioned on princess lines. Bridesmaids were Miss Eva Grace Buchanan, wearing pink, and Miss Nancy Weuneis, in blue. Belinda Jane Hill, in white organdy with basket of white rose petals, acted as flower girl. J. W. Davis served as best man and ushers were Wayne Davis and G. R. Worthington.

Stephansky—Edelman

Miss Anne Edelman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Edelman, and Ben Stephansky, son of H. A. Stephansky, Milwaukee, Wis., were married June 7. Judge Fay Bentley performed the ceremony at her home in Georgetown and a reception followed at the home of the bride's parents.

The bride is a graduate of Sarah Lawrence College and recently completed a field study of workers' education in Great Britain. The survey was conducted on behalf of the Department of Education of the CIO. Mr. Stephansky formerly was secretary to the National War Labor Board. For the past two years he has been instructor of economics at Sarah Lawrence College but is now leaving to take up the post of assistant professor, Department of Economics, University of Chicago.

Charnock—Hays

Miss Anna Frances Hays, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond H. Hays, Lanham, Md., became the bride of Edward William Charnock at a ceremony performed May 29 in the Divine Savior Seminary, Lanham. The bridegroom is the son of Lawrence E. Charnock, Wasshington.

Officiating at the service was the Rev. Waldemar Herborn. The bride was given in marriage by her father and attended by Miss Gertrude Kraus. Joseph Wagner served as best man.

Proposed 207-unit apartment project in Prince George's County to be built by Sidney Lust

'Riggs Manor' Favors Movie Men as Tenants

By Conrad P. Harness

"RIGGS MANOR," the city's newest proposed apartment housing project, has a restrictive clause with a new twist: first choice of the development's 207 apartments will go to war veterans connected with Washington's theater business.

Sponsor of the unique clause is the project's owner, Sidney B. Lust, proprietor of a chain of local movie houses. Lust said the restriction was forced on him by scores of his employes searching for adequate housing accommodations.

Next choice of empty apartments will go to veterans not connected with the theater business, said Lust, and then would come the nonveteran engaged in theatrical work.

The project, to cost an estimated $1,350,000, will be built on the Jane A. Riggs estate at Ager and Riggs rds. in Prince Georges County, Md. The site is the junction of the projected intercounty freeway and a major thoroughfare north from Washington, Lust added, and is approximately one mile from the District line.

Construction is expected to get underway around July 15, with a tentative completion date set for early spring next year.

A seven-store shopping center will be erected on ground adjacent to the apartments. Large parking facilities will be provided.

The project is designed along colonial lines by architects Edgar Weihe and Katherine Gibbs. The shopping center will conform generally in the same style.

The buildings will be situated on top of a small rise commanding an excellent view of the countryside. Apartments will be of one- and two-bedroom sizes.

A sizable preschool age playground is planned on the approximately nine-acre tract. Buildings, said Weihe, will occupy only 22 per cent of the land with a density of 25 families to the acre.

Rentals will be established by FHA, Lust stated. Housing regulations now in effect limit rentals on such projects to an average of $80 per apartment.

Coin operated automatic washing machines and clothes dryers will be provided.

The project, Lust stated, is to be financed by the Metropolitan Mortgage Co. through an FHA insured loan with Goldsten Brothers, brokers.

Supply Improves

Rejuvenate War-Weary Bathrooms

Is your bathroom war-weary? Here are some suggestions for spring rejuvenation of bathrooms.

Plumbing fixtures are in far better supply now than a year ago. For many bathrooms, the replacement of outmoded fixtures by new equipment is indicated. Homeowners today have a choice between a variety of models of attractive fixtures, some of which are now available in colors.

Thousands of bathrooms still lack one of the essentials, namely, a shower over the tub or in a separate leak-proof compartment. Shower equipment, too, is more plentiful than some months ago, and is offered in a variety of styles to fit all requirements. Unsatisfactory wartime substitutes in shower heads have been replaced by handsome and durable chromium-plated brass equipment.

Accessories, particularly new medicine cabinets, will do much to brighten up bathrooms. Many bathrooms are in need of new seats or safety grabbars over the tub.

New faucets on the lavatory and new valves on the tub will add much to the efficiency and utility of many older bathrooms. Many improvements have been made in the engineering and design of faucets in recent years. The handsome chromium-plated faucets now available have been termed "bathroom jewelry."

Real Estate Round-Up

WASHINGTON'S organized realtors, saving and loan officials, and members of the local Building Congress are going all-out for fun during the next few days. Annual outings will draw hundreds to nearby beaches and country clubs.

Everything is ready for the Realtors' Tenth Annual Stag Outing on Tuesday, at Bay Ridge Beach, Md., President Charles H. Hillegeist of the local Real Estate Board has announced.

The party will leave the Board's offices at 1417 K st. nw., at 12:30 with a police escort. Festivities will include golf, races, softball, horseshoe pitching contests and other sports. Dinner will be served at 6:15, followed by entertainment.

Howard E. Thompson is chairman of the outing. Aiding him are the following: Entertainment committee, Richard J. Donohoe, R. Lee Baxter anad J. McKenney Berry, jr.; games, J. Lee Donnelly and Henry L. Bouscaren; dinner, A. S. Gardiner, jr., Joseph F. Swain and H. W. Morgan, jr.; souvenirs, Frank Paroni and John R. Neal; tickets, J. C. Weedon, jr., and A. Britton Browne.

PLANS for the annual outing of the D. C. Building and Loan League on June 23 at the Prince George's Country Club have been completed, J. Hawley Smith, chairman, said yesterday.

Eddie McAleer will serve as golf committee chairman. R. E. Early, prize committee chairman, announced a large number of door prizes would be awarded.

Lee Baxter, ticket chairman, estimated 225 would attend the affair. Following dinner and awarding of trophies, music and entertainment will be furnished by Leon Brusiloff.

Work to Start On High Point Apartments

Construction is expected to get underway immediately on the 300-unit High Point apartments, Wheeler rd. and Barnaby ter. se. A District building permit was issued yesterday.

The multiple housing development will cover 13 acres and be of colonial design. Fourteen major buildings will be erected.

Exterior construction will be of brick and cinder block. Structures will be three stories high, with oil hot water heat.

The breakdown of apartment units show that when completed there will be 85 one-bedroom apartments and 215 two-bedroom units.

Laundry facilities and locker storage will be provided for use of tenants. Rentals are to be set by the local Federal Housing Administration office, which is insuring the mortgage loan.

At least 50 per cent off-street parking facilities will be provided for use of tenants. Builder is Standard Construction Co. E. Burton Corning and Raymond Moore, 1726 M st. nw., are architects. Owner is the High Point Apartments, Inc.

Construction is expected to take at least eight months. Playground facilities for children will be constructed.

Increasing Travel Ease

A new electronic heating and air conditioning control system has been developed to end drafts and increase comfort on railroad coaches.

Buys Valuable Connecticut Ave. Property

Sloane Furniture Plans Expansion

PLANS for expansion of store facilities here by the W. & J. Sloane furniture store were disclosed yesterday.

The firm has purchased a three-story brick commercial property located at the junction of Connecticut ave., S and 21st sts. nw., for a reported $250,000 and later will erect a modern furniture store on the site.

The present W. & J. Sloane store is located at 1217 Connecticut ave. nw.

Ben. L. Prince, of the office of J. Rupert Mohler, jr., conducted the sales transaction. The proposed building, said Prince, will feature more than 200 feet of first floor window display and contain about 30,000 square feet of floor area.

The present building will probably be razed and a new one erected on the site, it was indicated.

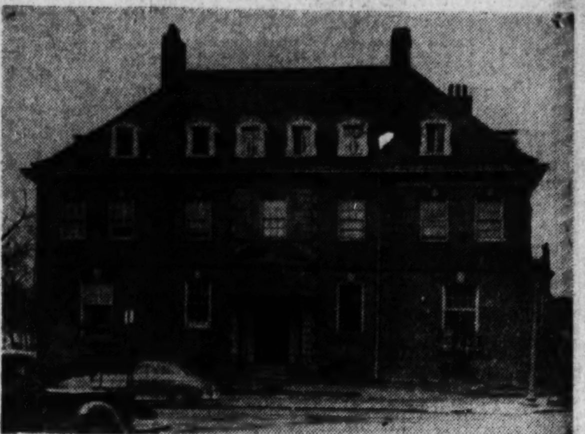
The present building was built in 1910 and was owned by Richard Dickenson Jouett, New York attorney who died in 1917. The structure was used as a winter home and was one of several pieces of real estate here owned by the Jouett family. The property was sold by heirs of the Jouett estate, according to Prince.

The structure now houses several small commercial establishments, including a hat shop, beauty parlor, dramatic academy and two apartments. The leases are on a month-to-month basis, Prince stated.

The property has a 60-foot frontage on Connecticut ave., 75 feet on S st. and 80 feet on 21st st.

The W. & J. Sloane chain of furniture stores was founded in New York City 106 years ago. The local outlet has been in operation since 1904. Other stores are in San Francisco, Beverly Hills, Calif., and White Plains, N. Y.

Originated in 1843 by William and John Sloan, the third and fourth generations of the founders now head the firm. John Sloan, grandson of William Sloan, is board chairman. W. E. S. Griswold, a great-grandson, is firm president.



ABOVE property at Connecticut ave., S and 21st sts. nw., has been purchased by W. & J. Sloane, furniture store, for its future Washington home

D. C. Broker Sells Estate in S. C.

Middleton Train, of the firm of Fitch, Fox & Brown, local real estate brokers, has sold his estate in Aiken, S. C., according to Previews, Inc., marketing agents for the property. H. B. Ram, theater manager of Aiken, was the purchaser.

The frame colonial residence, which has 10 rooms and 5 baths, was built in 1927. It has a large living room and a paneled library with a fireplace and a recessed bar. Lawn terraces, flowering shrubbery and a pine grove characterize the 4½-acre grounds. A tennis court, a seven-room cottage and a stable are included in the sale.

Silver Spring Civic Center Plans Jan. 1 Opening Date

SILVER SPRING'S proposed $600,000 civic center is expected to be a reality by January 1, 1948. A construction contract is expected to be awarded by June 20 and ground to be broken shortly thereafter.

The project is to be situated on a large site at Georgia ave. and King st., just over the District Line. Office of the Housing Expediter has given its blessing.

Planned by a group of Silver Spring businessmen and civic leaders, a limited stock issue was opened to the public, with shares held to a minimum.

To be built of limestone, the modern edifice will house a complete gym, steam room, men's bar, 200 lockers and a swimming pool on the lower level.

On the street floor will be a restaurant and a 3200-capacity ballroom with a large stage for broadcasting, plus dressing rooms and a spacious foyer. A grand stairway, fronting on Georgia ave., will serve the upper level. On the third and top floor will be banquet rooms and offices.

The Silver Spring area has long needed such a structure. A rapidly expanding population has overtaxed recreational, eating and civic facilities in the area.

Dancers will glide over a glass floor, colored by indirect lighting, the newest innovation in ballrooms.

Local business establishments are already making plans for use of the civic center, according to Charles Copeland, publicity chairman for the Silver Spring Board of Trade.

Definitely scheduled to be held in the center are three car shows, two flower exhibitions and a dog show.

Dancers will enjoy "big-name" orchestras in the ballroom, Copeland added. Tentatively scheduled to open the dancing on January 1 is Sammy Kaye's famed "Swing and Sway" Band.

Plans are under way to make the opening an auspicious event. Stage, screen and radio stars will make their appearance in the "Hollywood premiere" opening. The Governor of Maryland will be invited, Copeland said.

Radio networks have evidenced interest in the project's possibilities for broadcasting. Present facilities in the District area are meager.

The civic center is strictly a private enterprise project. Directing plans for the center are such Silver Spring leaders as Lee H. Robinson, John R. Fagan, George Day, Stanley Pearson, Dr. Claude Mitchell, Henry Worcester, jr., Cyrus Armiger, Admiral Adolphus Station, William M. Wright and John Wexler.

Two Purchase Interest in Lumber Firm

Bernard V. O'Neill and Julius Wolf, both formerly associated with Hechinger Co., have purchased an interest in the Rucker Lumber Co. in Arlington, it was announced yesterday.

O'Neill and Wolf will serve as firm vice presidents, Harry L. Ryan, president of Rucker Lumber Co., stated.

The firm maintains an office and yard at 1320 Wilson blvd., Arlington, and carries a general line of lumber, millwork and building supplies. A mill on the premises manufactures special millwork items.

O'Neill had been associated with Hachinger Co. for the last 15 years, as controller. Wolf was formerly general manager of Hechinger Co.

Other Rucker Lumber Co. officials include J. Emory Miles, secretary and R. N. Ungemach, treasurer.

A welcome addition to porches, especially in muddy weather, is the "Klean-Shoe," a device with high quality brushes on each side to scrape mud or snow from the sides and bottoms of shoes. It is attached to frame porches by screws. For homes with cement or stone steps it can be screwed into a wedge-shaped wood piece driven into the ground beside the porch or side door.

Are your awnings so faded and shabby you hate to put them up? Do they look as if they might not last another season? A new type of canvas paint will help to renew and beautify them. The paint can be brushed or sprayed on and leaves the fabric pliable, according to the maker. Other paint types will make it water repellent and mildew resistant.

One answer to the trash and garbage disposal problem is by burning. A manufacturer is now producing an outdoor "downdraft" incinerator which burns all trash from the top down. Wet garbage, says the maker, is subject to complete air circulation at all times, eliminating many objectionable odors. The entire top of the unit lifts off the base for easy cleaning.

Sub Floors Important

Good subfloors are recognized today as one of the fundamentals of satisfactory flooring construction. Flooring experts recommend sub-floors be laid diagonally over the joists and that plenty of nails be used for both sub-floors and finished floors to keep out squeaks.

Radiator Tips

The use of reflective insulation back of a recessed radiator will save about 5 per cent of fuel, tests at the University of Illinois have disclosed. In the case of free-standing radiators, the saving is not appreciable, being less than 1 per cent.

Charm, Utility

Half 'n' Half Dutch Doors Still Appeal

Through the centuries, Dutch doors—in which the bottom and top sections can be opened separately—have never lost their strong appeal for home owners who wish to combine charm with utility.

This is evidenced by a recent nation-wide survey, made by Ponderosa Pine Woodwork, which shows that nearly 25 per cent of the respondents plan to include Dutch doors in their new home.

One reason for the popularity of the Dutch doors is the fact that they fulfill a certain definite need in today's scheme of living.

With the bottom half of the door closed and the top open, the Dutch door is useful for a child's room or nursery, since it permits the child to be heard, provides ventilation, and prevents the child's leaving the room.

Used as the main or service entrance of a home, the Dutch door permits communication with less intimate callers, yet effectively prevents them from entering.

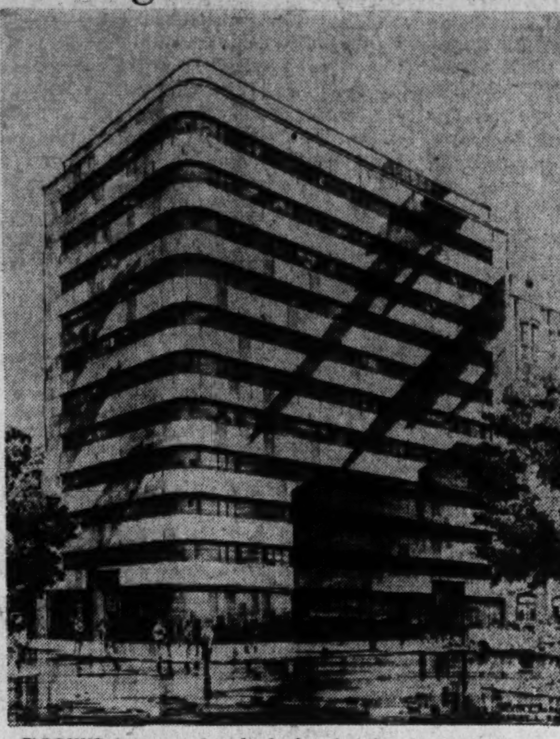
Construction to Begin When Building Controls Are Lifted



GROUND is expected to be broken for this proposed one-million-dollar, 12-story office building as soon as Government building controls are ended. The project will be located at the northwest corner of Vermont ave. and K sts. nw. Owners are Preston E. and Raymond Wire, builder is Alvin L. Aubinoe, Inc. Preliminary plans for the structure were begun over two years ago. The building will have over 73,000 feet of floor area. The House of Representatives voted this week to end the Office of the Housing Expediter and most building controls by July 1

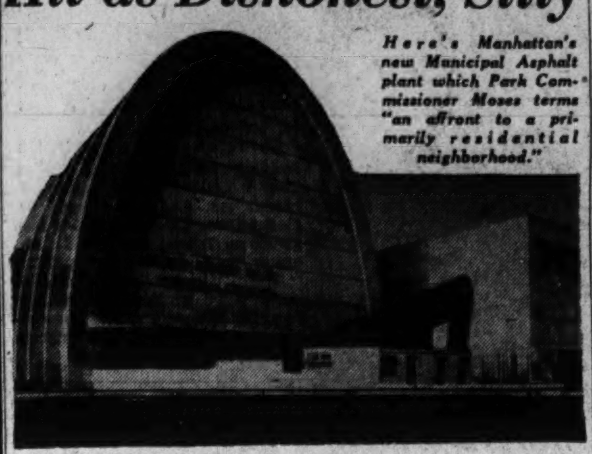
Moses Will Take Chippendale

Functional Building Hit as Dishonest, Silly



Here's Manhattan's new Municipal Asphalt plant which Park Commissioner Moses terms "an affront to a primarily residential neighborhood."

By Robert Moses

New York City Park Commissioner

THE editor gave me carte blanche to write this piece—which gives me a chance to say that the ultra-modernists have too much of a grip on the press. Why? Obviously because no one likes to be labeled as old-fashioned, stick-in-the-mud, fuddy-duddy or a museum piece.

MOSES

It is much pleasanter to be one of those up-and-coming lads rushing heedlessly into the future and shouting, "Come on in, the water's fine." But first—three words.

The three little words which in most arguments about design are batted about without any analysis of their meanings are "conservative," "functionalist" and "eclectic."

Where's the Fire?

THE true conservative moves forward toward a near-by goal slowly, steadily, calmly and deliberately, somewhat restrained by familiar forms and ties to the past. The functionalist or modernist, having cut himself off from the lessons of the past, is untrammeled, iconoclastic, revolutionary, out of breath and in a great hurry to go for the sake of going. He claims that his great objective is to adapt form to use. His real ambition is to be a few jumps ahead of his unborn grandchildren.

An eclectic is every designer and builder who has to make a living. The average purchaser of his wares instinctively wants what looks and will wear like the things he has seen and used before.

The most successful functional houses built by two- and four-legged creatures out of handy, native material to ward off elements and enemies are the igloo, the South Sea hut, the beaver dam and the bird's nest. Millions are occupied the year 'round, and no "For Rent" shingles are hung on them.

How could they have been devised originally without our modern architects? Because the modernists are so busy making schools look like factories, apartment houses like institutions, furniture like surgical appliances, and people like blobs of concrete and geometrical patterns, that they haven't got around to the smug, primitive folk who can't possibly know what is good for them.

In New York, we have a fine, simple old Colonial house, the Gracie Mansion, where the Mayor lives. The view to the north and west is obscured by two of the most hideous water-front structures ever inflicted on a city by a combination of architectural conceit and official bad taste.

An Insult to Tradition

ONE houses part of a municipal asphalt plant and the other a water-front sanitation dump. Neither is honestly functional. Both are an affront to a primarily residential neighborhood. Obviously the men who put them there had no regard for the Gracie Mansion, the surroundings and the view from the river.

Similarly, the new Museum of Abstract Art, for which a plot has been acquired on Fifth ave. and which is designed like a gigantic inverted cup and saucer with a silo added for good luck, has no functional advantage—unless you subscribe to the theory that students of non-objective art are happiest riding up in elevators and shuffling down a spiral ramp.

I want to be fair about this and therefore interpolate some quotes from a characteristic letter on the subject from its designer, Frank Lloyd Wright:

"Come off—Bob! The museum building for the Guggenheims does consider the neighborhood and the park more generously in every way than any building on the avenue!

Old-Fashioned New York

"I HAVE the feeling in New York, when there, that stupid or bad as the building is I am looking at, there is a worse one right around the corner. And I am never disappointed. When the whole world is changing (yes, no exaggeration) from the constipated copies of 'ye olden times' to a more enlightened school of thought—see South America, Mexico, Great Britain (she gave me her highest honor in architecture), France, Italy, Sweden, Norway, the Balkans, Japan, China, even—all are going forward—does New York have to sit 'way down behind?"

Let us take another New York example, the new Park ave. addition to Hunter College. Hunter's first addition was vast and collegiate, if you will, but still Gothic. Near by were the Beaux Arts, Pratt mansion, the traditional, ornate James mansion, the restrained new Union Club and other rather fine houses and undistinctive but acceptable apartments representing what is currently sneered at as eclecticism.

Why introduce something which looks like an isotope plant or hormone factory into a distinctly residential setting, protected as such by zoning, and, above all, why not have a college look like a college?

What Is It?

A STRANGER in almost any big American city has the devil's own time identifying the old landmarks. It is the pride of functionalists that no structure must have a shape, tag or symbol which identifies it and links it with tradition or custom. "I'm not sure," says the barker or cabby, "whether it's the new Aaron Burr High School or the Squirrel Storage and Warehouse!"

Some of our great housing projects, because of high land values and building costs, must go up into the air 10 or more stories. But need they look like prisons? Here and there we find an apologetic, ectoplasmic figure to break the endless expanse of brick, a meaningless statue which looks for all the world as if it were about to ooze back into the wall.

The new factories which line U. S. Route No. 1 in New Jersey, with their open, landscaped grounds, are first-rate pieces of clean, economical, unornamented, horizontal industrial construction, faintly reminiscent of this or that period. They do not pretend to be anything but what they are—pleasant, sanitary, well-planned places to work—not to be confused with churches, schools or homes, where symbolism is almost as important as use. That is why identical, machine-built, assembly-line houses, for instance, will never have enduring charm.

Functionalists, beware! You may have misread the signs of the times. When the great revulsion comes, simple, clean design, honest, unadorned steel and some new materials will, no doubt, survive; but plain folk, fed up with function, will toss most of the current surgical furniture out of the window, crowd the antique sales, yell for chairs, beds and tables fashioned after the manner of the monks, Jacobeans, Anne and Adam, abandon the glare of modern lighting for the candles of the pioneers and the chiaroscuro of Rembrandt, and patch up shabby old places rather than build and furnish modernistic new ones.

When that day comes, Chippendale, Inc. will again sell briskly at par, but Functional Art Products will be quoted at five asked—and no bidders.

63 Single Homes Due in Arlington

Permits for erection of 63 new detached homes were issued during May by the Arlington County building inspector's office.

Permits for projects worth $1,140,643 were approved. Included were two apartment buildings of 48 units, valued at $210,000.

Since last July, Arlington County has approved $13,343,343 in proposed construction projects.

Hotel Taproom Will Remodel

The Hotel Washington Taproom, long a landmark in the downtown area, will close today to undergo extensive renovations. It will discard its dark colors, T. E. Snodgrass, hotel manager, stated, and don a new coat of paint in muted shades of green.

Painting will be done by John H. Davis, paint contractor, 1019 G st. se. The room will have mirrored columns, installed by Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., and new plastic seats, designed and manufactured by Horney's Interior Service, Arlington.

The decorative scheme has been keyed about a Wilton carpet to be laid by W. & J. Sloane. The remodeled taproom will reopen around July 1, said Snodgrass. Architect A. R. Clas will supervise the project.

Air Conditioning Agency Is Named

The Amco Products Co., 1812 M st. nw., has been appointed local sales representative for the Pacific Manufacturing Corp. of Cleveland, manufacturers of "packaged" air-conditioning units for individual rooms, according to an announcement by S. C. May, vice president and general sales manager.

The Pacific unit, May stated, can sit on any window sill more than 22½ inches wide, cools by refrigeration, dehumidification, ventilation and circulation and simultaneous filtering of the air as it enters the room.

Flooring Facts

Wood for flooring is grown by lumbermen and sold to flooring manufacturers, who process it into the finished product. Production is limited to the mills' ability to obtain lumber.

Roundup of Real Estate News

Sutton is now associated with the office of J. Rupert Mohler, jr., 1223 Connecticut ave. nw. . . . Syracuse University will soon begin a project to study wood decay in homes . . . Financing of real estate over the Nation in April was 10 per cent higher than March . . . Homes in Radiant Valley, near Landover, Md., were the subject of a story in this month's National Saving and Loan Journal . . . A new device to take a few of the headaches of construction is offered by the "Tournamixer," a new, howitzer-like, 7-yard transit mixer for concrete. The new machine can pour concrete at heights up to more than 20 feet.

A pin-up girl wallpaper is the current rage in fraternity houses . . . Ginny Simms, radio star, and her husband are constructing 508 new homes in Los Angeles . . . E. E. Branscome, Miami apartment house owner, feels so strongly against rent control that he's put out a press release pointing out the alleged evils . . . Lumber industry's answer to today's construction needs will be aired June 16-18 at the American Lumber Congress in Chicago . . . Macy's, in New York, is spending a small fortune on newspaper advertisements plugging sales of the much-publicized, but seldom seen, "Storage-wall." Another Macy's sales item is a screen and storm door with an all-aluminum frame . . . The American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers has announced the fourth farm appraisal case-study course, at Ohio State, Columbus, Ohio, August 11-23.

EVERY time these three men get together Washington gets more news about the Home Show-Exposition set for the National Guard Armory, October 11-19. Left to right, Clarence W. Gosnell, Home Show chairman, Donal L. Chamberlin, president, Home Builders Association of Metropolitan Washington and Larry Hanson, association executive director. The trio says the how will be the largest exposition in the country and has the support of the Board of Trade and other civic organizations. Object of the show is to encourage home ownership.

SMALL ESTATE

A charm of the Old World has been imparted to this Normandy brick home, with a Woodland setting, of two to four acres of land, carefully planned and only 6 years old. It is authentic in its Normandy design. There is an abundance of details that only an inspection will disclose, yet the interior is modern. The first floor with its circular turret-like entrance with winding staircase personifies the Old World atmosphere. There is a large living room with built-in cabinets, a beautiful powder room with full bath, and a kitchen that is a delight, with a breakfast nook and an abundance of cabinets and other appointments seldom seen. The 2nd floor has 3 large bedrooms, 2 beautiful baths. The basement has a large recreation room and fireplace. Maid's quarters with bath, and other large storage space. There is a large screened porch overlooking a wooded area, and a modern oil heating plant. There is random width oak flooring pegged down. The home is close to Bethesda and well financed. Shown by appointment only.

A Vacant Lot Is Often Vacant For Good Reason

A vacant plot is not always a bargain, particularly if located in an area that is fairly well built up. In such cases there is usually a reason it is vacant. Hence, the prospective buyer should examine the land closely because a high growth of weeds may hide a lot of faults.

It is wise to walk across it in several directions and note whether it will need an undue amount of filling. Residents of the neighborhood should be queried as to whether water stands on the plot and whether they had excavation difficulties. Solid rock often underlies an area, making excavation extremely costly.

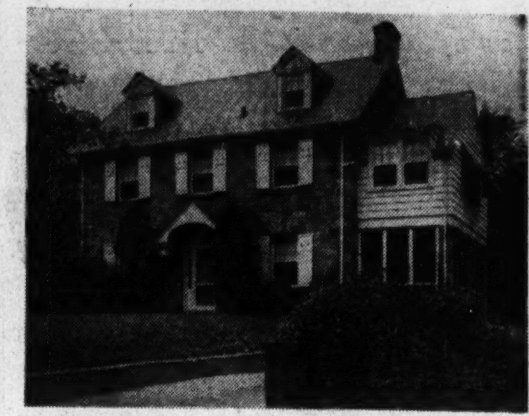
CHEVY CHASE, MARYLAND

4 West Leland Street

OPEN TODAY, 1 TO 6 P. M.



Here is one of the most attractive and impressive homes in Chevy Chase, situated between the Columbia and Chevy Chase Country Clubs, built of stone by the owner-occupant and beautifully landscaped; rear garden partially terraced with flagstones.

In our opinion, as custom builders, this house is as well built as any we have ever seen and could not be duplicated today for the price being asked of $32,500. It will carry about $20,000 first trust and the owner does not require all cash above this figure.

The house consists of large living room with fireplace, dining room, center hall, kitchen and pantry on the first floor; second floor has 4 bedrooms and 2 baths; third floor has one bedroom and a large storage room. The screened porch runs the full depth of the house over the two-car tandem garage, which has an entrance into the basement. It is heated by oil and has been entirely redecorated. Possession about July 15.

To Reach: Out Connecticut Ave. to Leland left to Leland to No. 4 and our "open" sign.

Long-Range Plans Offer Hope

Ebbing Resources Menace U. S. Living Scale

By Sigrid Arne

SUPPOSE American forests deteriorated and Americans had to import lumber for homes. The price would jump to cover long freight hauls. More Americans might have to live less well.

Suppose American oil should run out because we used it wastefully. Imported gasoline might cost so much that some Americans would have to take to walking or cycling, as many Europeans do.

Suppose we didn't preserve enough cattle range to raise the beef we need. The rich still could buy steaks. But others could afford good beef only for celebrations.

Department of Interior experts say that all of these things are possible. The Nation has used up its natural wealth lavishly and the population is growing.

A future with more people to share less could mean a poorer living standard. But Interior Department experts say it won't if we take a "stitch in time."

They propose huge long-range programs and reforms including making better use of what we have, using substitutes when a necessity gets low, making new land from swamp and desert and planting new forests.

Here are examples of trouble ahead and ways to meet it, as the experts see it:

1. They expect 20 million more people in 20 years. To keep them in beef we need 150,000 more steers and 12,000,000 acres more range for each additional one million persons. Range won't be easy to find. Land use experts propose re-seeding the old range.

2. New machines in the cotton South are expected to throw many workers out of jobs in the next 20 years. Experts say we should drain Southern swamps for new small farms to cushion the shock.

3. Forestry men warn that our forests were seriously over-cut through the war. They want a "sustained yield" program to limit the annual cut of trees to the number maturing each year. They want new forests planted.

4. Oil experts say we are using petroleum twice as fast as we are finding new pools. Should oil run low before we know how to make substitutes it would be a terrific shock to American economy. To ward it off the Government, as well as private industry, is starting synthetic oil experiments.

5. There are ways of stretching wealth. Where factories can use hydroelectric power instead of burning oil, oil is saved for greater necessities.

Through the war we used up metal reserves so swiftly that now the United States Bureau of Mines says our underground hoard of copper, lead and zinc is "seriously depleted" and the best iron, on the Mesabi Range, is estimated to run out in 20 years.

Mines experts say only 10 per cent of the country is adequately mapped for minerals. Interior Department Secretary J. A. Krug thinks a thorough survey might turn up new wealth. He points out we found our own potash deposits only when we couldn't buy from Germany in World War I, wants scientists to find new ways to use lower grade ores and new ways to look for mineral deposits.

So we won't be caught short, the Government is now stockpiling 31 materials on military reservations.

Far ahead, Krug sees a devastating possibility that he says could be avoided now. If this Nation finally has to import large quantities of ores, he says, factories slowly will shift to the coasts to cut the cost of the freight haul. It would be a terrific shock to the Great Lakes industrial area, as he sees it, and great cities would slowly shrink.

Krug suggests we now adopt the St. Lawrence seaway plan to open that river for ocean-going vessels. It would avoid the tremendous expense of an industrial shift to the coasts, he thinks, and it would save the terrific loss in values around the Great Lakes.

There is oppostion to the seaway plan in Congress on grounds of expense and doubt that it would accomplish its object.

OIL shale samplers need clear heads, steady hands. These Bureau of Mines employes are drilling holes on cliffs near Rifle, Colo., for blasting to obtain samples of oil shale for analysis. Oil experts say we are using petroleum twice as fast as we are finding new pools. We might have to shift to synthetic oils made from coal and shale

Put New Flooring Right Over Old

Home owners planning to remodel can lay a new floor over an old, according to modernization experts. The old floor will serve as a subfloor. It first must be made even by driving down all loose nails, replacing boards that cannot be made level and driving all nails securely.

VIRGINIA ESTATE

11 Miles from Chain Bridge

Situated in Fairfax County on Chain Bridge Road in the Great Falls area is this delightfully arranged early American Clapboard and Stone residence of 10 rooms with 97 acres of high rolling land.

The residence, an architectural gem, has been beautifully restored; is surrounded by numerous boxwood walks, flowers, lilac hedges, lovely trees; also 2-room and bath guest house, below which is the swimming pool and bath houses.

There are 5 open fireplaces, original woodwork and hardware, pine paneled library, 4 master bedrooms, each with a private bath, a delightful drawing room with period mantel in addition to another living room with pine mantel and trim. The dinng room possesses charming beamed ceilings and a huge open fireplace with original crane off of which is the breakfast room, pantries and spacious kitchen. A magnificent glassed-in enclosed porch with fan-shaped windows completes the living floor space and is organized for both winter and summer usage. The house possesses all the modern appointments and comforts which would appeal to the most discriminating person.

The farm buildings include a 3-room and bath help house, small stable, sheep house, 2 sheds, corn house and a chicken house. Reasonably priced.

Sleepy Daisy Is Best New Annual

Of the dozen or so new annuals that have found their way into the catalogues of the more progressive seed dealers, the sleepy daisy (Xanthisma texanum) has proved one of the best. It also is known as Star of Texas, which appropriately describes the starry, rich yellow flowers.

They measure about 2½ inches across and are borne profusely on plants standing 18 inches.

Full sun and perfect soil drainage are important to this Texas native. The name sleepy daisy refers to the habit of the blooms, which do not open until the sun has reached the half-way mark.

SPRING rains are a reminder that protection against flooded basements should be given careful consideration in the planning of new houses.

Prospective home builders should obtain the advice of an experienced plumbing contractor on the advantages of devices available to protect basements against flooding.

One is the automatic sump pump which removes water which seeps into the basement. The other is an automatic back-water valve which prevents the sewer from backing up through the floor drain or through plumbing fixtures in the basement.

Whether either or both devices should be installed depends on local drainage conditions with which plumbers are familiar.

The use of iron sewer pipe under the basement floor with tight joints and tight covers on the floor drains is recommended. Only iron pipe has the advantage of being entirely leakproof and also resistant to roots which sometimes enter the joints of other pipe and cause leaks or clogging.

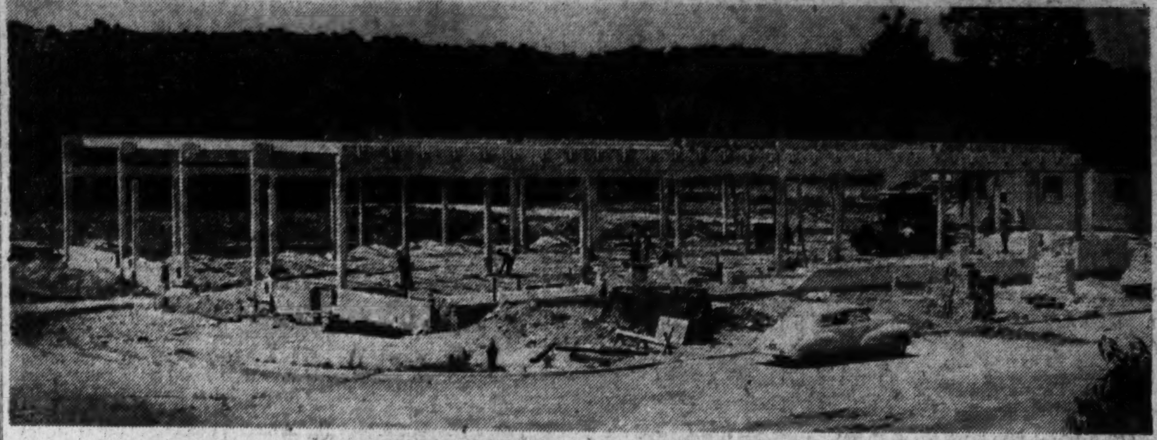
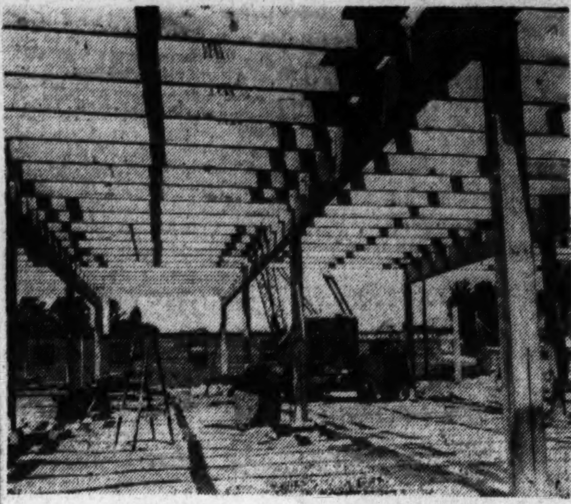
Precast in Pittsburgh for Local Pepsi-Cola Plant

Prefabricated Concrete Makes Debut Here



STREET view of the building shows cementstone construction which eliminates field form work and concrete pouring for superstructure. When completed and equipped the plant will have an estimated capacity of one million cases of Pepsi-Cola per year



Post Staff Photos by Goodwin.

STRUCTURAL framing for the new Old Dominion Pepsi-Cola building in South Arlington is made of pre-cast concrete for speed and ease of erection. Crane in background quickly lifts beams and girders into place

SOMETHING new in the way of building materials has been added in Arlington's bustling construction boom.

A new method of construction has been introduced here in the structural framing, roof decking, and sidewall panel enclosures for a $600,000 building now being erected for the Old Dominion Pepsi-Cola Co., at Four Mile Run and Oakmont st., near the Shirlington Shopping Center.

All structural framing was pre-engineered and precast, of reinforced concrete in standardized structural shapes, at Pittsburgh, Pa., delivered to the site ready for erection, and is now being rapidly assembled.

Cost Is Lower

This method of construction is said to provide fireproof buildings in a shorter time and at lower cost than has ever before been possible.

The building is a one-story structure, with 25,000 square feet of floor area. It will be used temporarily as a garage and storage depot when completed. Later, when equipment is available, it will be converted into a bottling plant to service the Arlington, Alexandria, Fairfax and Prince Georges County area.

The novel concrete framing is a product of the Cementstone Corp. of Pittsburgh, with erection by the Cementstone Construction Co. of Delaware.

A. C. Grafflin, vice president and general manager of the Cementstone Corp., said the prefabricated concrete building elements were 10 to 20 per cent less costly than comparable steel, fireproofed construction, and 20 per cent cheaper than poured-in-place concrete.

Local labor is used to erect the concrete framing. An experienced construction superintendent furnished by the Cementstone Corp. supervises erection. Cranes hoist the girders and columns into place.

"Concrete" Lumber Developed

The Cementstone Corp. has also developed "concrete" lumber, Grafflin stated, which is suitable for fire-resistant, termite-proof, maintenance-proof housing, apartment and light industrial buildings.

Russell M. Arundel, president of the Old Dominion Pepsi-Cola Co., said the plant would have a production capacity of one million cases per year when completed.

He predicted completion by spring, 1948.

An application to the Office of the Housing Expediter will be filed in October, said Arundel, to permit installation of machines and equipment.

Department Store 'Prefab' Exhibit Excites Shoppers

NEW YORK, June 14 (U.P.).—There are seven brand-new homes here destined to frustrate a good portion of this town's home-hungry population. They're not for sale. They're just neatly arranged on the eighth floor of a department store.

To anyone who has searched two years for a two-room apartment, these prefabricated homes in John Wanamaker's Village of Vision inspire nightmares of discontent. Ready to live in—except for the plumbing—the packaged homes were made by Johnson Quality Homes, Inc. and decorated by Wanamakers.

The most livable—and naturally, the most expensive—is "The Fleetwood," a three-bedroom home which rambles in several directions. The base price—which doesn't include plumbing or foundations, is $6736.

"The Fleetwood" uses plywood paneling for walls and ceilings. Plywood is so thin it goes up almost like wallpaper. The living room, with a dining nook near the kitchen, has walls of drift oak paneling and a solid wood ceiling. The light problem is solved by a row of windows along one entire wall.

The Fleetwood's master bedroom is paneled in blond birch, while another has wood cut in vertical strips for a bamboo-like effect on one wall and the ceiling.

The value of this prefabricated paneling is its adaptability. It fits into any color scheme, is suitable for any type of furniture and eliminates repainting or repapering.

The Fleetwood is built like the letter T, with an added wing jutting off the kitchen. The three bedrooms form the top of the letter, while the living room and kitchen form the stem. The extra wing accommodates a back porch and garage. The floor plan is particularly suitable for framing a back-yard terrace and makes future additions to the basic house architecturally simple.

The other six houses are scaled down in price to $1460, the base price for a tiny house about the size of a two-room apartment. This one—the "Beachwood Packaged Home"—seems to be more of a stop-gap residence than the permanent thing. The living room beams are exposed, the closet is merely a recess in the wall and the bathroom has a small shower instead of a tub.

The chief point of interest if the Beachwood is its price—the overall cost, for construction, kitchen and bathroom equipment, furniture and all accessories, is $2818.

Wisteria Requires Patience

Careful attention to pruning and the avoidance of overfertilization sometimes will induce a wisteria to bloom. Some seedling plants, however, require as long as 20 or 30 years before they flower.

Wild Blueberries Inferior

While it is possible to transplant wild blueberries into the garden, the fruit they ordinarily bear is so inferior in quality and quantity to that produced by superior garden varieties it is not worth doing.

Asbestos Cement Boards Economize

Active, growing youngsters cause mother plenty of headaches—particularly when they get to the "rough-house" age and start chewing up the furniture, walls and floors of their playroom-bedroom with gentle pastimes like shooting suction-tipped arrows at targets on the walls.

It's all in good fun and healthy youngsters can't be held in check all the time—but the maintenance and upkeep of such rooms is often a major problem for the heads of the household.

An increasing number of family heads are getting around the problem by installing asbestos cement board for walls and door surfaces.

New Bed for Polio Victims

An oscillating bed with an electronic drive has been developed to further treatment of infantile paralysis victims.

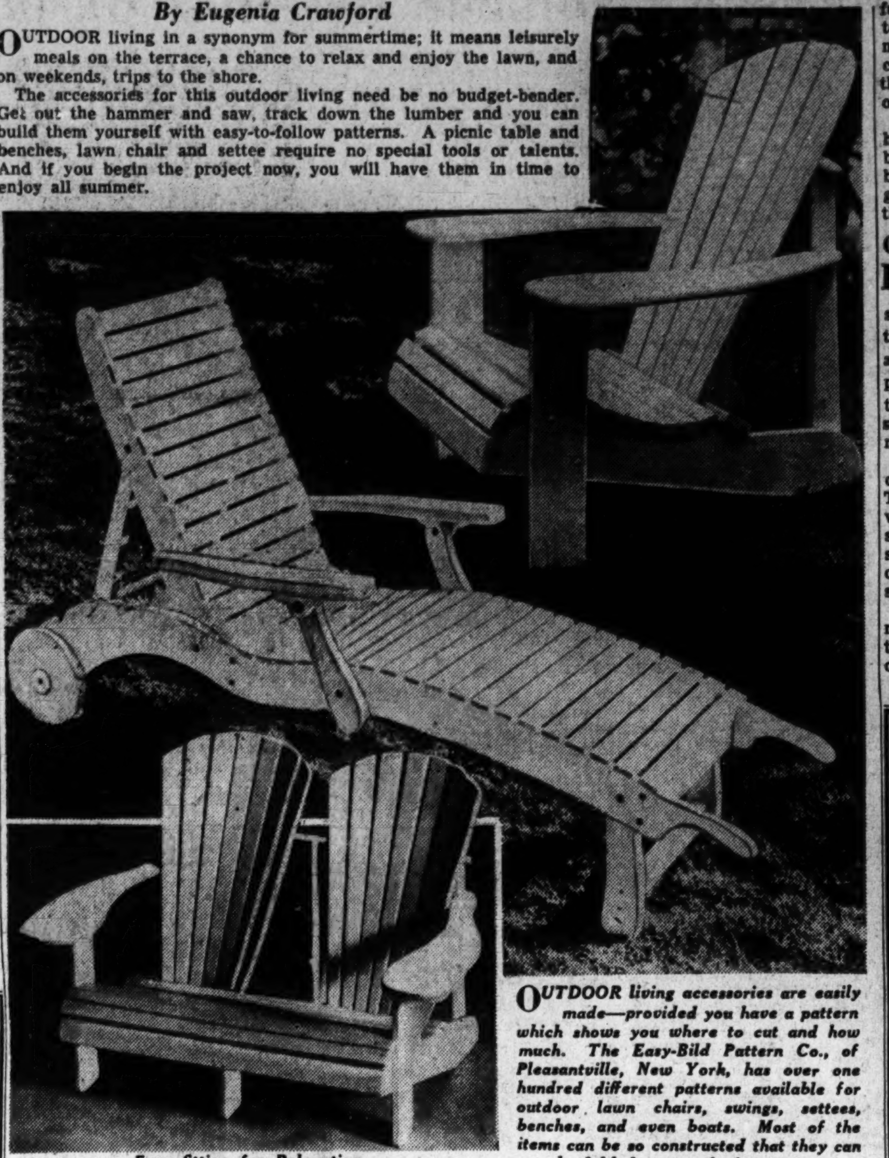
Saw, Hammer and Pattern is All You Need

'Build-It-Yourself' Time Is Here Again

By Eugenia Crawford

OUTDOOR living in a synonym for summertime; it means leisurely meals on the terrace, a chance to relax and enjoy the lawn, and on weekends, trips to the shore.

The accessories for this outdoor living need be no budget-bender. Get out the hammer and saw, track down the lumber and you can build them yourself with easy-to-follow patterns. A picnic table and benches, lawn chair and settee require no special tools or talents. And if you begin the project now, you will have them in time to enjoy all summer.



Form-fitting for Relaxation

OUTDOOR living accessories are easily made—provided you have a pattern which shows you where to cut and how much. The Easy-Bild Pattern Co., of Pleasantville, New York, has over one hundred different patterns available for outdoor lawn chairs, swings, settees, benches, and even boats. Most of the items can be so constructed that they can be folded compactly for storage

A picnic at home, a few feet from the kitchen. You can build a table yourself, then set it with a gay gingham cloth, add sturdy ware and watch meal-interest grow.

The full-size pattern gives directions for tracing on lumber, sawing and fastening pieces together. That's all there is to it. The only materials needed are lumber, bolts and screws.

WHEN fall comes, move it down to the basement or the rumpus room and use it as a game table. Or it can be folded up and stored for the winter months.

The form-fitting lawn chair and settee are desirable additions to your side of the hedge. They are meant for just the kind of relaxing you need after a day at the office or duty-filled day at home.

And this attractive lawn set is future-worthy: The chair and settee are sturdy enough to last for many years. They can be folded compactly to go into a corner of the garage or basement between outdoor seasons.

The decorator in the family will have fun with these: Each slat can be painted a bright hue for a rainbow effect, or to harmonize with a garden setting. Or white to accent the green surroundings.

Comfort in the Sun

FOR cushioned comfort that isn't marred by either rain or hot sun you can cut seats and backs for the lawn set from sponge rubber and then cover them with a new plastic-coated sailcloth. Even pastel tones in this material will withstand the elements and also junior's muddy shoes.

This lawn set can form the nucleus of an outdoor living room. To complete the effect and add convenience, there's a build-it-yourself coffee table. And a magazine stand is another interior prop you can make for your life under the sky.

A few hours spent with the hammer and saw will reward you with these accessories for summer living out-of-doors.

PUBLIC AUCTION SALE

This tract is unique in the entire country. Situated at the city's edge, surrounded by the choicest suburbs of the Nation's Capital, it was for many years unavailable for purchase. Meanwhile, some of Washington's finest suburbs grew up around it.

Today it provides unequalled possibilities for development of any kind. There is no finer tract of land available anywhere in the Washington area . . . a city where homes and apartments are in great demand and bring premium prices.

Rare physical beauty is found here. Gently rolling contours, stately trees and delightful vistas make it ideal for residential development. Graceful, curving, proposed streets have been laid out in conformity with the topography of the land, including a beautiful wide proposed Parkway.

The tract has been preserved unspoiled in its entirety and, as a result, is suitable for a development of any magnitude or character, or for a special purpose. The buyer will be in a position to determine and control its ultimate destiny.

Front parcel of 33 acres includes over 500 feet frontage on Wisconsin Avenue . . . of tremendous potential value.

Right at hand are finest schools, buses on Wisconsin Avenue (20 minutes to center of Washington), two complete shopping centers, two country clubs . . . everything needed for an ideal community.

The auction sale of this property presents one of the country's outstanding development and investment opportunities. It deserves the attention and study of builders, developers, investors and investment syndicates throughout the country.

LET'S TALK ABOUT GARDENS

Herbs a Profitable Bet Most Gardeners Miss

By James H. Beattie

THERE'S a lot of satisfaction in growing unusual garden crops. In most home gardens little attention is paid to herbs. Many herbs are easily grown and require so little space that their culture is possible even in small gardens.

Only a limited number of herbs is likely to interest the average gardener. Unfortunately, lack of familiarity with the merits of herbs is widespread.

From a climatic point of view the Washington area is very well adapted to the growing of many important herb plants. Their culture is quite simple. Almost any good garden site is capable of growing a few.

Take Your Choice

HERBS differ in taste appeal to a greater extent than most garden products. To some, a certain herb may be exceedingly desirable and to others it has no appeal whatever. Because of taste differences it is important to plant only those herbs which are liked by the family. A few better-known ones are so widely used that they are almost sure to be included in most gardens where herbs are grown.

Most Herbs Require Little Space

For the sake of simplicity and general desirability, celery, celeriac, chives, garlic, mint, parsley and sage are suggested for those making their first plantings of herbs. Individual taste should be the final judge in selecting herbs. Farmers' Bulletin No. 1977 'Savory Herbs, Culture and Uses" gives a more extensive list of herbs for beginners:

Pungent Herbs: Rosemary, sage and winter savory.

Herbs for Accent: Sweet basil, dill, mint, sweet marjoram, tarragon (French), and thyme (English).

Herbs especially good in blends: Chervil, chive, parsley (curled), summer savory.

To this list the author suggests that celery, celeriac (turnip-rooted celery) and garlic be added later.

Easy to Plant

Practically all seedmen carry seeds or plants of the more common herbs. For the more unusual ones it is usually necessary to contact herb specialists.

One of the simplest ways to establish an herb planting of sage and many other herb plants is to obtain a part of an existing plant from someone who has it growing in the garden.

Many annual herbs are easily started by sowing the seed directly in the garden during early spring. Others, including celery and celeriac, require indoor starting of the seed some three months in advance of the outdoor planting date.

CELERY: Many place celery at the top of the list for seasoning. This plant has the double advantage of being perhaps the finest of the salad plants and excellent for seasoning soups and stews.

The turnip-rooted celery, known as celeriac, is extensively used as a cooked vegetable. It has a very pleasing aromatic flavor. Celery seed is widely used for seasoning purposes and special varieties have been developed which produce large quantities of seed.

Celery seed is usually produced during the second year of the plant and the difficulty in storing the plants over-winter makes celery seed production impractical for most gardeners.

Celery may be grown in many Washington gardens without particular difficulty by observing a few precautions. very fertile, damp but well-drained soil is required. Both spring and fall crops may be grown. April and July are the usual months for garden setting of the plants.

The seed is sowed two and a half to three months in advance of these dates. Celeriac is handled in the same manner as celery.

CHIVE: The leaves and green bulbs of this near relative of the onion have a delicate flavor much prized in salads, stews and otherwise. The plant is used in the green state, seldom as the dried bulbs.

GARLIC: Garlic bulbs are much prized for flavoring salads, soups, etc. The crop is grown like onions by setting the "cloves" or bulbs in the same way as onion sets. Spring planting and midsummer harvesting are usual procedure.

National 'Dark' This Week

Closing Season Proves We Go For Good Plays

By Richard L. Coe

LAST NIGHT'S CURTAIN on "Lute Song" rang down a season of 40 weeks at the National. Since our theater-poor town's "legit" house is air-cooled, you can look forward to it reopening soon. But for the record, the traditional season ended last night.

That record of 40 weeks includes 5 musicals, 10 comedies and 8 dramas, of which 8 productions were tryouts before New York. Of those eight tryouts, only two went on to ultimate success.

On a business basis the season was fine.

On an entertainment basis the season was good.

For what we like to consider the most cultured Nation on earth, the season was not so good.

That's not the National's fault, to be sure, but the fact remains we have but one legitimate theater in this proud capital of the world. The good plays we had enjoyed splendid audiences. But so far as theater is concerned, we're still little better than the sleepy Southern town we used to be.

Wonder what Moscow would make of this. Moscow, with its widely publicized theaters, music and ballet? (Note to Representative Thomas: We're not a C——; we were brought up as a Jersey Republican!)

Calling the Roll

HERE'S THE SEASON'S RECORD: "The Magnificent Heel" opened September 14 to a poor press and fair audiences. It closed for revisions the next Saturday and may pop up on next season's schedule of Brock Pemberton as an out-and-out comedy.

"THE TEMPORARY MRS. SMITH" followed. The notices were worse and so was business. It reopened later in New York as "Lovely Me," folded quickly.

"COME ON UP" was Mae West's romp, a poor play but there was always Mae. We liked her and so did $27,000 worth of customers. But Mae didn't risk New York with it.

"PRESENT LAUGHTER" was the Noel Coward comedy of the year, not top-drawer Coward, but Clifton Webb stayed two weeks and took it on to New York for a better than break-even run.

"THE STUDENT PRINCE" returned for 11 performances, did more than $28,000 worth of business. That means you can count on the Shuberts bringing it back next year.

"PYGMALION" and Gertrude Lawrence stayed only a week. We didn't think this was Gertie's dish, but she hit almost $30,000 for the week.

"THE HAVEN" was a mystery and the mystery was why Viola Rubber produced it. The year's worst play and worst business.

"APPLE OF HIS EYE" brought Walter Huston back to a town that loves him. It was the Theater Guild's first subscription play. He stayed two weeks to smash business in opposition to Ingrid Bergman at Lisner Auditorium. Miss Bergman's "Joan of Lorraine" took over $85,000 worth of Washington money with her, going on to become the New York season's dramatic triumph. Dual hits suggest our town has plenty of of appetite.

"BLOOMER GIRL" was the best straight musical and in two weeks played to over $70,000 worth of filled houses.

"EAGLE RAMPANT" starred Tallulah Bankhead, another local favorite. In Gotham it died after 29 performances.

"LOVE GOES TO PRESS" just didn't catch on and the Martha Gellhorn-Virginia Cowles comedy was as bad a flop here as it became in New York.

"THE MAGNIFICENT YANKEE" returned for a single week to good houses.

"UP IN CENTRAL PARK" took over for four weeks at the Christmas holidays and grossed $104,800. This musical was definitely inferior to "Bloomer Girl," which didn't stay as long.

"BLOSSOM TIME" came back for two weeks to its usual excellent business (no matter how pallid the reviews) and you'll probably have a chance at it again next year.

"THE GLASS MENAGERIE" did fine for two weeks, even on the cut-rate subscription basis and with Pauline Lord wearing tailored clothes and nylons as the poverty-stricken old Southern belle.

"STATE OF THE NATION" was a Washington natural for three weeks of elegant houses. It had played a week here a year ago on its tryout tour.

"THE FATAL WEAKNESS" gave us Ina Claire in the season's best new play for two capacity weeks.

"THE ICEMAN COMETH," after a disappointing run in New York, gave Washington a chance at its first Eugene O'Neill in too long. Lots of talk pro and con, but its business was the best it ever had anywhere.

"HAMLET" gave us our last glimpse of Maurice Evans in his celebrated role and the week did elegantly at the box office.

"DEAR RUTH," which had been here for three weeks last summer, came back for another two.

"THE TWO MRS. CARROLLS," back for the third time, for two weeks, found that almost everyone who wanted to already had seen Elisabeth Bergner in her 4-year-old role.

"LOVE FOR LOVE" opened here before its limited New York run, the John Gielgud company doing two near-capacity weeks, the year's finest play-acting.

"LUTE SONG," the season's most visually beautiful offering, did two weeks on subscription and added a third which went even better, to close the season in a blaze of box-office glory.

A Good Theater Town

SUMMING UP this season, Manager Edmund Plohn put it succinctly: "Good shows did good business. Bad shows did bad business."

One more thing the season proves (producers know already)—Washington is a darn good theater town. The audiences are right here waiting for the National to reopen and for a second legit house to be born.

And the only thing which destroys the dream is the one the knowing use: There mightn't be enough shows to fill two houses. If there were enough plays running on the road or in New York the National wouldn't be dark next week.

It's the sort of argument that goes in circles, but being an optimist, we have a notion if there were another theater in Washington, plays would somehow come visiting to fill 'em.

SUNTIME and Santa Claus; Hollywood brings all things as these two pictures prove. Up top you see Merle Oberon basking in the sunshine after completing "Memory of Love" with Dana Andrews and Ethel Barrymore, which will be along at Keith's eventually. And below you see Edmund Gwenn decked out as Santa in what is heralded as one of the year's better films, "Miracle on 34th Street." It will arrive on the Palace screen in a few weeks. As one more straw in the wind of realism that currently is blowing over Hollywood, the picture comes right out and talks about the feud between Macy's and Gimbel's, the New York department stores, just like that. John Payne and Natalie Wood are Santa's visitors. Maureen O'Hara is the light in Payne's eyes.

The Vitality and Build of a Fire Engine

On Sophie It Looks Good

By Inez Robb

NEW YORK, June 14 (INS).—Cleopatra and Sophie Tucker have one thing in common. And it isn't Marc Antony. Like Cleo, "age does not wither nor custom stale" the buxom siren of Broadway.

Sophie settled her 180 pounds plus in a comfortable chair today and boomed: "Honey, what have I got that Lana Turner, Rita Hayworth and Paulette Goddard haven't got?"

Then the last of the Red Hot Mamas answered her own rhetorical question: "Twice as much of everything!"

Sophie shifted her bulk. Then she added: "But on me, it looks good."

SOPHIE TUCKER
. . . still struttin'

Good? Why on Sophie it looks wonderful!

At twice the age and ring-side weight of the average cinema queen, Sophie still earns twice as much per annum as any two — or maybe three—of 'em put together.

After four decades in show business, Sophie still rakes in $6500 per week. She is probably the only entertainer at any salary, with solid bookings through 1949.

What Keeps Her Going

IN HER current show at Latin Quarter, classy Broadway night spot, Sophie sings: "I'm Having More Fun Since I'm Fifty Than I've Had the Rest of My Life."

"And it's true, too!" she chortled in her husky voice that can be heard in Connecticut on a clear day. "I'm having a wonderful time.

"Why last night, standing near the entrance autographing my books, I heard a voice say 'Are you married?' I don't even look up when I answer 'No, are you interested?' Then the voice answered 'I sure am, ma'am.' Then I looked up and it's a soldier who can't be more than 20.

"I just looked at the kid and said, 'Why, you're only a baby!' and he said, 'I know, ma'am, but I've been looking for a girl with pep and you've got it!'"

Sophie, whose hair and heart are of the same bright, indestructible gold, threw out her arms in the old punch-line gesture.

"Now what can you say to a boy like that? I just said 'Kid, it's things like this that gives me the pep I've got.'"

After 40 years of trouping, Sophie still has the verve, vitality and general outlines of a fire engine.

No More Gambling

TODAY Sophie is something of a one-woman charity bureau. Since 1945, she has made almost $150,000 from the sale or her autobiography, "Some of These Days." She has given all that and much more away.

Her checks go out to a needy mission in Africa, a struggling clinic in India, a boys' club in London, a church school in Canada, the Sing Sing Prison welfare fund, and to many charity organizations in the United States.

She has given up betting on the horses.

"I used to be a tremendous gambler. I was no piker, no $2 bettor. I shot the wad. But no more. I'm reformed. If I lost a buck on the horses today, I'd kick myself around the block. It would be just that much less to give to the charities I'm really interested in."

Even when she goes to Saratoga next August as the featured entertainer at Saratoga's biggest night spot, Sophie will stay 'way from the bangtails, she says.

'It Always Happens'

AFTER Saratoga, Sophie goes to California for night club engagements. Has she any movie commitments?

"No! I haven't one at the moment. But just wait. I'll get out to Los Angeles at that night club. And Zanuck, and Selznick and L. B. Mayer will be crowding the ring-side tables.

"They'll sit there and say 'By golly! Look at the old bag! Isn't she wonderful? I must go out and find a picture for her this minute.'"

The last of the Red Hot Mamas bounced out of her chair with the ease and speed of a 16-year-old. She boomed:

"So they'll go out and scare up a picture, and I'll leave Hollywood with a contract in my pocket. Never fails to happen that way."

SUSAN HAYWARD, as an unhappy wife who takes to drink, has the finest role of her career in the Metropolitan's "Smash-Up—The Story of a Woman." Miss Hayward's make-believe is top-notch. In the cast with her are Lee Bowman, Marsha Hunt and Eddie Albert

Harry Bannister's View

Fun, Not Art, Is Theaters' Goal

By Lucius Beebe

IT'S ALL very well, having one's name in lights on Broadway and getting fan mail and fair reviews. Fame, a tolerable amount of wealth and other worldly symbols are all right, but once Harry Bannister, the swivel-chair general of Norman Krasna's "John Loves Mary" at the Music Box, experienced more enduring rewards and greater riches than any within the gift of Broadway.

Money beyond the reckonings of avarice, the plaudits and adulation of beautiful women, the heady wines of triumph all were his. Far away and long ago.

That was in Manistee, Mich., when Bannister was playing in local stock at $6 a week. The basic salary was actually $4, but the additional two fish were for being property man, general utility man, bit player, errand boy and extra. Bannister was not only incomparable; he was indestructible and indispensable.

World His Oyster

"THERE has never been anything like it since," Bannister told the reporter. "The world was my oyster, the adoring theatergoers of Manistee's fast stepping night-life set were eating out of my hand. My name was on the handbills, clearly visible with only a small reading-glass.

"My princely emolument enabled me to buy soda pop and even banana splits at the corner drug store with spendthrift gestures. I was the original answer to why girls left home."

A country boy at heart, Bannister was trapped into city circumstance by the merest chance. He had skipped high school classes at Battle Creek to visit his sister Virginia who was leading performer in the Manistee stock company, when the juvenile lead fell ill. What to do? There was a cool $75 worth of business out front and the prospect of refunding it was more than the stage manager could bear. The leading juvenile's evening tailcoat was only a little too small for Bannister and if he didn't sit down in them the trousers probably would't split. Go on, young man, and save the day!

HARRY BANNISTER
. . . wants to play a beachcomber

Bannister saved the day to tumultuous applause and was promptly taken into the company on a permanent basis. Soon he annexed the title of property man.

Art for Fun's Sake

"FROM that day I have felt that my function as a player or producer is to make fun for people and not of them. I hold little brief for the thesis of the theater as art for its own sake. I think of it as art for amusement's sake, and that comedy is the highest expression of that art. The greatest actor is the man who is able to make a house full of people completely forget the vexations of life. A great acting genius may even make them forget taxes for a time."

Bannister recently was featured in a "Life With Father" company and in "Strip for Action." Prior to that he staged "The Drunkard" and "Murder in the Old Red Barn."

For three years, Bannister was under contract to various film studios in Hollywood and appeared in films with his former wife, Ann Harding. Subsequent Broadway triumphs were in "The Czarina," with Doris Keane; "The Good," with Frances Starr; "Strange Interlude" with Pauline Lord, and "I Must Love Someone," with Nancy Carroll.

Theater Tames Him

"I HAVE always had a sort of secret hanker to play a dirty old beachcomber in a South Seas melodrama," he says, "the part has limitless opportunities for characterization and, of course, it is ideally suited to my person and temperaments. Actually, I am more interested in producing than in acting. I like money and I like to have to do with it. I think the theater, if you stay around it long enough, tends to tame even the most adventuresome people. I'm pretty well tamed."

A symbol of Bannister's state-of-tameness and respectability is his 165-acre farm near Flemington, N. J., on which he raises hay, grain, and garden products for sale in New York market. There is, too, a remodeled Dutch Colonial farmhouse filled with period antiques.

"Although I believe comedy is my strongest bill of goods," he says, "I don't want to be thought of as an essentially frivolous fellow. I think success in the theater is predicated on seriousness and a serious approach to the stage and its problems. After all, comedy is the most serious of all theatrical techniques and I am a comedian."

Jennifer's Got The Money But Not the Time

HOLLYWOOD, June 14 (AP).—Jennifer Jones has spent the last five months in New York and it hasn't done a thing for her wardrobe.

Given time and money, a woman should be able to fill a closet with nice duds during 20 weeks in that fashion center. Jennifer's got the money, but not the time.

Jennifer is busy eight hours a day, six days a week (during store hours, that is) on location for "Portrait of Jennie."

Templeton's Satire Has Wit, Not Malice

By John Crosby

THE description of music, I've always felt, is about as difficult and misleading as the blind men's description of an elephant. I know no words or combination of words that fit around a piece of music with any great snugness. This applies particularly to Alec Templeton, the sightless pianist, whose method of expression is beyond the power of words and, in many ways, infinitely more descriptive.

TEMPLETON

Nevertheless, within the limitation of prose, I'll do my best to express my unbridled enthusiasm for Mr. Templeton, who for the second summer in succession has replaced Edgar Bergen on NBC (8 p. m. EDT Sundays.)

Almost every reviewer who has ever tangled with Mr. Templeton comes up with the word "wit." Mr. Templeton is undoubtedly a musical wit and in that regard alone he is unique. But his brand of wit is almost unique too. In his voice and in his music he is gentle, frolicsome, light as a feather. His specialty is satire, but it is satire without the sting or malice which distinguishes so much American satire. It's a form of Gallic sophistication rarely ever found in this country.

Similarities of Tunes

TEMPLETON has returned to the air with the same kind of a show he had last summer, which is all right with me. While the orchestra plays Tschaikowsky's "Dance of the Hours," he will wander off on "After You've Gone," revealing along the way the curious similarities between those two tunes. In this mood his piano is spirited, gay and—well, mischievous is the word, I guess.

A moment later, the mood will change and Mr. Templeton will engage in Debussy's "Arabesque." Here the tone is brilliant; the approach is serious, and the technique is masterful. Debussy and Templeton are kindred spirits anyhow, poetic, colorful and—you can't get away from this word—gay.

As in last year's show, Templeton calls for suggestions from the audience and then blends four tunes, two popular and two serious, into one musical stew, taking a phrase from one and fitting it by some magic of his own into a phrase from another. It's quite a trick all right, and somehow puts all music on a single plane where it ought to be anyway.

I'm afraid I'm giving the impression that Mr. Templeton and his piano were the whole show, which isn't true. The pianist was surrounded by a lot of other able talent, including Ben Grauer, a big orchestra and chorus and a singer named Eugenia Baird who has a pleasant warm voice and uses the vocal tricks employed by all the other female singers in radio. Mr. Templeton announced that Milena Miller would be the singer on the next program, so I guess there will be a different one each week.

Some Bad Poesy

TO add a couple of sour notes, Mr. Grauer and Mr. Templeton indulge in a good deal of poesy, some of it pretty bad, in

Siamese Actor

Chet Shows Good Will by Cutting Name

Bangkok, Siam, June 14 (INS). Mom Chao Chetanakorn Voravarn is a Siamese prince who dearly wants to be a Hollywood movie star.

The prince, a cousin of the Siamese King and half brother of Siam's Ambassador to the United States, feels that as a Siamese screen personality he could do more to gain good will for his country than as a statesman.

While attending the University of Southern California, the prince had bit roles in 26 films and acted as technical adviser for "Anna and the King of Siam." As the Jap pilot in "God Is My Co-Pilot" he shot down Actor Dane Clark.

The prince, who in Hollywood streamlined his name to "Chet Voravan," is prouder of his screen actors' guild card than of his title.

He delights in relating that during a low point in the royal finances he acted as Rita Hayworth's chauffeur and held down a time clerk's job in Henry Kaiser's Richmond No. 3 Shipyard.

Hoping to parlay his role in "God Is My Co-pilot" into a series of Japanese villain roles, the prince studied for eight months at Ben Bard's Hollywood Acting School to perfect his Nipponese accent.

The war's end more or less ended this phase of the prince's cinema career and he now is casting about for a different type of character role.

The prince, known as the "most eligible bachelor in Siam," plans to return to Hollywood in midsummer.

A master of the American idiom and endowed with considerable business acumen, he plans to spend his time off the screen operating a Siamese curio store in Hollywood.

The Siamese emphasized, however, that the screen will have the first call on his time.

"I hope," he said, "to become as well known to American movie-goers as Siamese twins, Siamese cats and Siamese fighting fish."

Luscious Lana Is Back to Ash Gray

By Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, June 14.—The color of her hair, about which reams of copy have been written, had gone from black to ash gray since she'd finished "Green Dolphin Street." It wasn't from worry. She's not the worrying kind. For years she's been dyeing to please her public—changing the shade of her hair almost as often as she changed her loves.

Wearing a suede jacket, brown slacks, and sandals, she reclined upon her dressing room couch on the "Cass Timerlane" set and purred like a kitten. Her claws, clipped by those little darts that Cupid hurls, were carefully sheathed. She stared with frank, innocent blue eyes at whomever she was addressing. Talking with the eager ease of a high school girl, she had to be called twice to report for make-up.

When she walked two blocks to buy a bottle of perfume in Buenos Aires a while back 120 policemen had to be called out to disperse the mob that gathered to get a glimpse of her. The slightest escapade on her part was sufficient to cause editors throut the country to start hauling out their largest, boldest type. Her tempestuous, headlong nature breathed headlines.

She'd been twice married, twice divorced, and her name had been linked romantically with more men than a centipede has legs. In a relatively brief but hectic movie career she'd climbed from a seat at a malt shop counter to become our most flaming star. Her name on any marquee means plenty of silver in the box office.

Ten years ago she tested for her first picture at Warners. My son, Bill, was trying for a part in the same film. She snagged her role, but Bill didn't. Now he's dealing in horsepower as an automobile man, and she's dealing in just plain Power. And I do mean Ty.

The girl is, of course, Lana Turner. When I joined her in her dressing room she'd just come from lunch with Twentieth Century-Fox's pride and joy. The stars were still twinkling in her eyes.

LANA TURNER
. . . Her claws are clipped

Up in the Air

"Last Sunday," said she, "Ty flew the whole kit and boodle of us up to Carmel for dinner. My mother, his mother, my daughter—who loves flying—all went along. We had a wonderful day. I'm learning to pilot a plane myself."

"And about those marriage plans?" I asked.

She smiled like the cat that had gulped the canary. "O, we can't discuss that now," said she. "Ty's looking for a place to live, and I'm trying to sell my house."

"And that means what?"

"That it's better to rent houses than own them at this time," she grinned. "No, seriously, when I sold my last house and bought a little one I made $50,000 profit. But some day I'd like to build my dream house—with all the gadgets. I like to push buttons and watch things start operating."

"Does Ty want to buy a house?" I queried.

"No, he just wants to rent one, too," said she. So you can draw your own conclusions. But in my book it looks as if those two lovebirds are just biding their time on long-range plans. Since Lana's getting rid of her property and Ty's not interested in acquiring any right now, logic says they're just waiting to buy their home together.

Gold Combination

"Now is the time for you and Ty to make a picture together," said I. "If Metro and 20th Century-Fox would get together and co-star you two in a film it'd be a gold mine for every one concerned. The studios could even afford to give you a hefty bonus."

"O, Hedda," said she, "do you really think they'd let us do a film together? We already have a story picked out and have talked so much about it. But no. I don't think Metro will ever loan me out. Every time I ask to do a picture at another studio I'm told that a story is being prepared for me on my home lot.

"I wanted so badly to do 'Tap Roots.' I read the story and begged that it be bought for me. An option was taken on the book, but it was allowed to lapse. Now Walter Wanger has the property, and Susan Hayward is playing the role I dreamed of doing."

"Is there any other story you'd like?" said I. "We'll start working on it."

"'The King's General,'" she replied instantly; and I knew she'd given it a lot of thought.

"You'd have a nice costar—James Mason," said I.

"O, Hedda," said she, "I'd give my right arm up to there (indicating her shoulder) to play opposite that man in that picture."

I promised to call James, who was in New York, and tell him of her desire the next day.

Changes Made

Despite her success, Lana isn't particularly ecstatic over her screen career. While making "Green Dolphin Street" she got herself into a peck of trouble by taking off for Mexico to see Ty. She was stuck there when she couldn't get a plane out; and you could hear the howls that came out of Culver City almost all the way to Hollywood blvd.

When the two came to my house for dinner recently I stared at Lana in amazement. She wore a simple, inexpensive dress. She had on no jewelry and, with the exception of lipstick, no makeup.

Ty said: "See, I told you that you didn't know the girl. This is the real Lana Turner."

As I was leaving the sound stage she yelled at me, "Remember—up to there." Again she measured off her arm from the tips of her fingers to her shoulder. And I knew that she was asking me not to forget that picture with James Mason.

The next day I telephoned James and told him about Lana. He was interested and promised to take the matter up with Zoltan Korda, who's directing the picture. What a combination those two would make! Blonde Lana, dark James—and both as sultry as a smoldering campfire. They would literally burn up the screen. I can hardly wait to see it.

'Nightmare Alley' Is Tyrone's Next

Hollywood, June 14 (NYHT).—After completion of "Captain From Castile," Tyrone Power will star in William Lindsay Gresham's best-selling novel, "Nightmare Alley," to be produced by Twentieth Century-Fox. Power will play the role of Stanton Carlisle in the film, which will be directed by Edmund Goulding and produced by George Jessel.

The screen play is by Jules Furthman. Goulding's assignment to "Nightmare Alley" means the postponement of production on "The Song of Ramona" until later this year.

Cagney Excited Over Filming Saroyan's 'Time of Your Life'

By Thornton Delehanty

Hollywood (N. Y. H. T.).—"This will either be a great picture or we'll all get booted out of town," said H. C. Potter, known to his familiars as Hank, as he alternately sipped tea and cracked a sardonic whip over his troupe of highly trained actors on the set of "The Time of Your Life."

Earlier in the day, when we were having a Reuben's-like sandwich of ham and cheese on rye (with cole slaw) with Jeanne Cagney and her brother, Jimmy, in the latter's dressing room, there was the same cautious, but frightened, enthusiasm.

It was quite clear that Jim was more excited about this picture than any on which he had embarked since he went into business with brother Bill under the name of William Cagney Productions. He has a patent admiration for the Saroyan play, the Saroyan characters, the Saroyan warmth and vitality.

"The play is better now than when Saroyan wrote it," Jimmy said.

"How can that be? Has he changed it?" we asked.

Cagney shook his head. "The play hasn't been changed," he said, "but we have. It's what has happened in the world the last eight years. The violence of the play, the shrewdness of the observations, the pathos and futility, have a fresh and sharper meaning because of what we have been through. Saroyan anticipated events."

Setting a San Francisco Saloon

Cagney is fully aware of the hazards in bringing the play to the screen. The action takes place almost entirely in a single setting, that of San Francisco saloon. Only on a few minor occasions does the action depart from the play for exterior shots.

That is, of course, a perilous procedure in movie making. To compensate for the lack of visual change, Cagney decided at the outset that the audience's interest must be spread over the characters, riveted on them individually and collectively in their cramped quarters. The problem was therefore one of proper casting, and Cagney didn't go about it in the Hollywood way. He picked actors who can pluck a scene out of the air and hold it. "Every one of them," he said, "has to be able to go down stage center and do his act."

There is, for example, the matter of Paul Draper, who plays Harry, the frustrated hoofer.

"We tested lots of dancers, some of them pretty well known, but they weren't what we wanted. In the first place, we were looking for a hoofer, not a dancer. There is a difference. We didn't want a strong, healthy looking hoofer. We wanted some one with a kind of hopeless quality, sensitive; but a failure. Paul was surprised when we talked to him about the part. He qualified as a hoofer, because that's what he is essentially. We explained that even more important than the bits of hoofing he does is the portrayal of a character. He has to play the part as an actor rather than as himself, the hoofer."

Casting Done Carefully

William Bendix is Nick, the bartender, Wayne Morris is the goofy Tom, Jeanne Cagney has the Julie Hayden role of Kitty Duval; in each instance the casting was the result of exhaustive study and searching.

Although the picture has the aspect of a family affair, the selection of Jeanne Cagney illustrates how determined the family was not to have it that way. Jeanne had quit Hollywood after appearing in "Yankee Doodle" with brother Jimmy. She didn't want to be tagged as the kid sister being helped along by big brother. She had returned to the Coast a few months ago for another picture. At that time one actress after another had been tested for the Kitty Duval role. None hit the mark.

JIMMY CAGNEY
. . . Frightened enthusiasm

Jeanne was called over to the studio one afternoon and, because she and Bill Cagney had nothing better to do, made a test.

When Hank Potter was signed to direct the picture he looked over the various tests for Kitty.

"I really must take credit for getting her," he told us. "I saw Jeanne's test and knew that that was it. I practically had to drag her in over the bodies of those two whopping brothers. If there is any stealing to be done she is going to steal the picture."

Original Play the Script

When Jimmy was expanding to us over the merits of the play we asked him who wrote the screen adaptation.

"Saroyan," he said with an inflection implying "you dope!"

"Yes, yes," we replied hastily, "but the screen play, not the play."

"Saroyan," Cagney repeated. "There isn't any screen play. We are shooting from the original play. We had a screen writer and a director on it originally, but when they started rewriting Saroyan we threw them out and went back to the play. It isn't, of course, a word-for-word transcription. To my mind, one of the finest things about the play is in the published version where Saroyan writes descriptions of the various characters. We have devised a gimmick which will transplant these verbal characterizations into the picture. It sets the type of each character before he comes on the screen, and in Saroyan's words."

John Carradine Opens Tuesday at Olney

John Carradine of stage and screen fame will be guest star of the Olney Theater's next attraction, "A Bill of Divorcement," opening Tuesday night. Sonia Sorel, Carradine's wife, will also guest star in this production.

The play, written by Clemence Dane, is set in a suburb of London in the year 1933, and concerns the Fairfield family. Margaret Fairfield (played by Ruth White, who did the sardonic mother in "Dream Girl" so brilliantly), after waiting 15 years, has finally secured a divorce from her husband Hilary (John Carradine), committed to an asylum, due to his mental condition, which became serious as a result of shell shock.

After Margaret has consented to marry Grey Meredith (Joseph Hardy), who has courted her patiently for five years, Hilary suddenly recovers his sanity, returns to his home unexpectedly and is faced with the divorce, which is legal, since a wife or husband may secure one on grounds of insanity. (The audience is asked to imagine that recommendations of the Majority Report of the Commission on Divorce vs. Matrimonial Causes have become the law of the land.)

At first, Margaret is almost persuaded to stay with him, giving up her one chance for happiness. But their daughter, Sydney (Sonia Sorel), realizing that she will pass on the family streak of insanity if she marries, tells her mother that she'll stay with Hilary . . . letting the useless, rather than the useful, suffer. Sydney breaks off with her sweetheart, Kit (James Karen), and as the curtain falls, father and dughter are left alone.

Charles Dubin, who has the directorial assignment at Olney, has given a fresh slant to his treatment of "A Bill of Divorcement." Believing the moral issues hold up so well and present a direct parallel to those of the period following World War I, he is doing the play as a current postwar problem, in England of today.

Irving Berlin Song Biography Slated

Hollywood.—Irving Berlin's fortieth song-writing anniversary is to be recognized this year by Simon and Schuster's publication of a hundred of Berlin's most celebrated songs with an anecdotal history of each.

Publication will be in September, about the time Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's multi-star musical based on his "Easter Parade" goes into production with a cast headed by Judy Garland, Gene Kelly and Frank Sinatra. Berlin will be associated with Producer Arthur Freed in this production.

Oscar Hammerstein, II, and Richard Rogers, will write the 20,000 word biographical feature of the anniversary book, with songs ranging from Berlin's first, "Marie from Sunny Italy," for which he got 37 cents in 1907, to one of the eight new songs he has written for the musical.

Tune Show's Turnover Terrific

'Oklahoma' Grads Doing Just Dandy

By Jack O'Brian

NEW YORK, June 14 (AP).—While the steadily employed incumbents among the cast of "Oklahoma!" are the envy of their less successful musical compatriots, let it be known the graduates of the hardiest perennial among the local tune shows have done amazingly well for themselves.

The Rodgers and Hammerstein hit has had a greater personnel turnover than any other Broadway show.

Hollywood scouts and those from the casting departments of other Broadway producers constantly drop by to see if there might be a likely ingenue, a handsome singing leading man, character player or comedian for their own subsequent presentations.

Result is that among the three companies of "Oklahoma!" now on Broadway, in Philadelphia and London, there have been ten "Laureys," nine "Curlys," ten "Ado Annies," four Peddlers, and four "Aunt Ellers." These, of course, are only the principals.

Healthy Rotation

THE minor principals and the dancing and singing ensembles are in a constant state of turnover so that the Theater Guild employs the busiest casting department on Broadway for replacements alone.

This healthy rotation of theatrical crops has resulted in 36 marriages among members of the cast, six couples marrying right among the cast.

The latest such marriage was performed last Sunday when Van Atkins of the singing ensemble wed Bonita Bimrose, who was "Ado Annie" for a year and a half.

Immediate Sensation

THE graduates who have done nicely for themselves include Celeste Holm. She was an immediate sensation when the show opened, even though it was her first Broadway singing role.

Subsequently she was signed to appear at the Plaza's fashionable Persian Room at a much larger salary, and after leaving the show a year later, starred in "Bloomer Girl," winning more honors and a Twentieth Century-Fox contract which pays her $5000 a week. Although she had minor billing in her first picture, "Three Little Girls in Blue," she stole that film, too.

She is married to Schuyler Dunning of American Airlines and has a son, born six months ago.

Alfred Drake, the original "Curly," also has done well since "Oklahoma!" He married a young lady of the singing chorus, a beautiful girl with the unusual distaff name of Harvey Brown, who managed to remain in the Social Register despite appearing in a Broadway show, but who was dropped quietly after her marriage to the star.

Drake left "Oklahoma!" to appear in the Guild's "Sing Out Sweet Land" and the film, "Tars and Spars." He starred in "Beggar's Holiday," the Duke Ellington musical. He is considered one of the best musical comedy leading men currently available.

Original Villain

HOWARD DA SILVA, the original "Jud" (villain), won his largest acclaim in Hollywood after he left the show to appear in "Lost Weekend" as the bartender.

Pamela Britton, spirited to Hollywood by M-G-M scouts who saw her as "Ado Annie," played the role of "Brooklyn" opposite Frank Sinatra in the movie, "Anchors Aweigh," and presently is the star comedienne in "Brigadoon."

Joan Roberts, the first "Laurey," was gobbled up by Hollywood's hungry casting maw after the opening more than four years ago, and besides has been the star of several Broadway musicals, includ "Marinka" and "Are You With It?"

Joan McCracken, anonymously known as "The Girl Who Falls Down" in the first company, left to take a top role in "Bloomer Girl." She got excellent reviews. Later she starred in the title role of "Billion Dollar Baby."

A Role in Carousel

BAMBI LINN of the chorus won a featured role in "Carousel," attracted the attention of David O. Selznick who now pays her a small fortune annually while he looks around for the right cinema vehicle. Meanwhile, Bambi is starring in the current production of "Alice in Wonderland."

John Raitt did so well as the touring "Curly" that he was put into the lead of "Carousel" and now is in Hollywood.

Iva Withers has sung the lead in three shows which were on Broadway concurrently: "Oklahoma!" in which she was the third "Laurey;" "Carousel," in which she replaced Jan Clayton as "Julie Jordan," and again as Miss Clayton's successor in the leading role of "Show Boat." Currently she's back in "Carousel," in her same "Julie" part.

Mary Hatcher was lifted from the chorus to the lead, thence to Hollywood, where she starred in "Variety Girl," and later returned to the local stamping grounds in the same role.

Marc Platt went from the dancing ensemble to featured status in Hollywood.

Anne Crowley, the fifth "Laurey," was groomed for stardom by the Guild's far-seeing talent department which started her in the chorus and gradually advanced her. She's now in the Chicago "Carousel" company.

Brilliant New Album by Old Stravinsky

By Paul Hume

Stravinsky: Symphony in Three Movements. New York Philharmonic Orchestra directed by Igor Stravinsky. Columbia 680. $4.20.

The view that Igor Stravinsky lost his vitality when he left Sacre behind certainly receives a proper bump with this recent symphony. The work is not to be confused with the C Major symphony dating from 1940. This score was written in 1945 and received its world premiere in 1946 at the hands of the artists who here record it.

It is, in my opinion, a brilliant work, worthy of a place alongside those great moments of its composer. If you subscribe to the theory that Stravinsky is the greatest living composer, you see where that puts his symphony. And that's just where I would put it.

The rhythms for the most part are those of the exciting sections of Sacre. But they are new in sound, by what magic I cannot explain, and appropriate today in some metamorphosis which can only be realized by an intellect of the stature of Stravinsky's. The lyrical middle movements has its own fascination, and the final section is again on the vital-virile side.

With Stravinsky conducting, we have a performance of complete authenticity, preserved by Columbia's engineers with fine fidelity. Any record collection which fills its owners with self-respect should include this brilliant album.

Blitzstein: Symphony, "The Airborne." New York City Symphony Orchestra, with Victor Chorale, Charles Holland, tenor, Walter Scheff, baritone, Robert Shaw, narrator, Leonard Bernstein, piano, and directed by Mr. Bernstein.

Victor 1117. $8.40.

Here at last is the Airborne. Recorded last October following its New York premiere, it is a faithful representation of the forces which gave it birth. To judge it one must use more than musical measuring-sticks. For it is an attempt at the history of flight, a brief summary of the recent war, and a prophecy of the air age ahead.

You will hear such contemporary phrases as "airborne," "jet," and other words of today and tomorrow. You will hear, too, some of the tragedy of the war in cities, and in the lives of those who flew to death in planes.

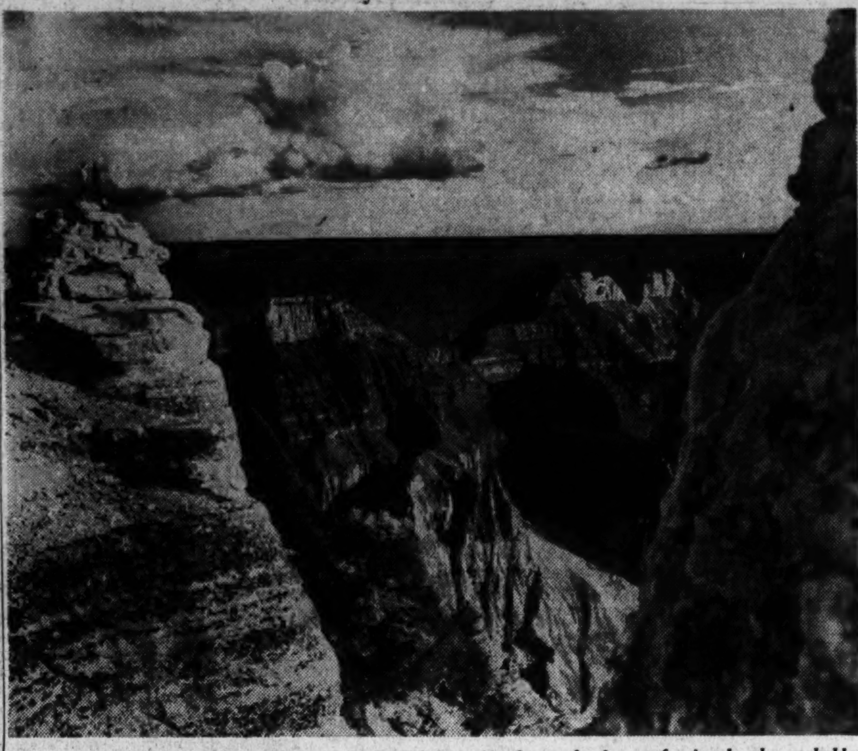
For all this, Blitzstein has used a variety of musical forms. Some of the music is just like the music for "Street Scene" by Kurt Weill, while at times it breaks off and there is no music, only speech. Your liking for the album will depend on your feeling about war, about a brilliant performance of a documentary work, and your reaction to lines and phases repeated rather too often.

The last side might well have been devoted to something other than Mr. Shaw's recitation of a weary poem called "Dusty Sun."

Taking Pictures

Fleecy Summer Sky Is Signal For Yellow or Orange Filter

By Ollie Atkins



This study of Grand Canyon National Park in Arizona is the work of a professional, who probably used everything except the bottom of a beer bottle to get all these effects

ONE secret of good summertime pictures is the proper use of filters to fill the otherwise drab sky area in your photograph with fleecy clouds.

Even the simplest cameras can use filters to advantage when there is a blue sky (with or without scattered clouds). There is no point in using filters for sky improvement on overcast days, as you only cut down your light and you can't photograph a beautiful sky when it isn't there.

Ordinarily the K-2 (yellow) filter will hold back the blue sky and give you good clouds. But for Washington's hazy skies I often find it necessary to use the G (orange) filter to produce enough contrast. The A (red) filter cuts down too much of the blue and you find yourself getting "moonlight" effects with little or no foreground detail.

There are many different filters, but the yellow and orange are all you really need. For more dramatic skies or "moonlight" effects add the red filter.

* * * *

Simple Arithmetic

ALL filters have a filter factor. It is generally right on the filter itself, but sometimes is on the case. These factors are marked 2x, 3x, 4x, etc. They mean that you must multiply your exposure by the factor indicated. With a 2x filter a scene which could be photographed at 1/100 second at F:11 would be shot at 1/50 second at F:11 or 1/100 second at F:8.

On box and other simple cameras you may use the yellow filter on bright days and at the beach without change in exposure, as the brightness and the latitude of the film will probably give you good results. Filters do not have to clamp onto the camera lens with special devices. You may hold them over the lens with your hand, being sure your fingers do not get in the way.

You will find yellow and orange filters very valuable at the seashore to reduce your exposure beyond the limits of your camera markings in the bright light on white sand and sparkling water. Atop a mountain they will help you pierce the haze and will improve the sky at the same time.

For sunsets and sunrises, you seldom need assistance from filters. Just figure your exposure for the sky, as this will be the point of greatest interest in your picture.

Never use a filter of any kind unless you really need it. To "wear" the colored gelatin when not necessary simply handicaps you with greater exposure requirements and shorter depth of focus field.

North Light

C. A. BRIGGS of 1311 Spring rd. nw. advises me that from now through mid-July is the best time of year to make pictures on the north sides of Washington buildings. During this short period the sun rises and sets well in the north and illuminates buildings with direct sunlight.

Circus Clown Paul Jung staged a camera act during the Big Top's stay here that I thought was wonderful. At the White House Photographers Ball he "attempted" to photograph George Tames, New York Times cameraman. The long bellows would suddenly leave the camera bed and look in all directions, attempting to spot the subject. Clown Jung powdered and combed Tames' hair and face in a manner befitting a pie-throwing comedy. When at long last the camera was set, a little bird popped out of the lensboard and spit water at Tames.

Dark Bathrooms

SOME one million camera fans in this country do their own developing and printing, N. C. Ferguson of the Eastman Kodak Co. tells me. Of the 20 million camera owners in the Nation, probably another million can be classified as photographic hobbyists. Most of these fans began with a simple home developing set, which I see are back in the photographic stores around town now. I recall I started out with one of these sets myself and the results were not bad at all. If you have a camera you might try out one of these outfits. Only real difficulty with them is that they tie up bathroom traffic, but if you confine your efforts to pictures of the family the missus can't complain too much.

Bill Gottlieb's Swing Sessions

Jivers Wondering What Europe's Cash Will Buy

NEW YORK, June 14.—The other guy's back yard is always greener. The particular yards of green (foldin' variety) being eyed these dismal days by hungry musicians are in Europe. The Continent may be blasted and nearly bankrupt. But what money is around, American musicians hear, is being lavished on entertainment. There's nothing else to buy.

Sounds good. Yet the issue isn't that simple. There are foreign labor restrictions, union restrictions, currency restrictions. There is fantastic inflation.

What the Joe Blows here are trying to figure is whether they'll need an extra trunk to carry home the loot or whether maybe they'll have to send a cable (collect) to beg the price of a return ticket.

Yesterday I spoke to Tyree Glenn, tram-vibe man now with Duke Ellington. Tyree returned from Europe last month. He summed up what other returnees and native European correspondents have told me: You may not have to wire for dough, but that trunk ain't necessary, either.

"I got $250 a week in Europe. Sounded great—until you tried to buy something with it. Inflation is THAT bad."

"The really worthwhile thing about Europe is the appreciative attitude of the people. An American swing musician is a somebody, there."

Most profitable countries in which to operate, according to Tyree, are Sweden and Switzerland, which have no inflation nor restrictions on sending money home. Next best are Belgium and Holland, followed by Denmark. Bottom of the heap are England, France, Spain and Italy.

Other Glenn observations: "You can get around some of the foreign labor department restrictions by calling yourself an "act" instead of a musician . . . The only place I found strong predjudices was in the American occupation zone . . . There are more swing magazines in Europe than in America . . . Musicians there haven't our emotional feel for swing but are more precise and conscientious . . . The best native players are in Sweden because they have enough money to buy new American rceords and absorb them."

GOOD NEIGHBOR POLICY: Cute, but not aimed at improving relations southward, is Woody Herman's "Pancho Maximilian Hernandez ,The Best President We Ever Had)" (Columbia) . . . Desi Arnaz has issued, simultaneously, eight uninspired treatments of can't-miss Latin American bromides: "Brazil," "Babalu," "La Camparsita," "Siboney," etc. (Victor) . . . busy clubs in town are those with a rhumba beat.

STORM OVER TORME: All the columnists have ganged up on Mel Torme. Not since the days of the early Buddy Rich has a guy been written off so strongly as a smart alec. The more rectangular the writer, the greater the anger. They want to stick to Al Jolson.

RIVERBOAT JAZZ: Using the old Mississippi jazz as a model, Promotors Art Hodes and Rudi Blesh are running concerts up the Hudson on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays . . . Dumor, a plastic company that makes record materials, threw a party for the trade on Cliff (Ukelele Ike) Edwards' house boat. It's a huge, converted Air Corps crash boat. Goes 45 m.p.h. and burns 135 gallons of high octane gas per hour (about $50 worth) at cruising speed. Cliff limits travel to a single hour jaunt per week.

TOMMY

JIMMY

Record Briefs: From their "Fabulous Dorseys" film, Tommy and Jimmy have recorded the "Dorsey Concerto" on both sides of a 12-inch Victor disc. It's pure Hollywood. "Serious" stuff that's 2 feet wide and 1/16th of an inch deep. Does show off their technique nicely, though . . . Jazz platter of the week is Brick Fleagle's "Blue Stew," featuring trumpeter Rox Stewart under the pseudonym half valve (H. R. S.) . . . Rex can also be heard anonymously on Roberta Lee's "Moanin' Low" (Sonora).

Stickily sweet is Freddy Stewart on "There's That Lonely Feeling Again" (Capitol). Someone called the Dreamlady speaks the patter lines in Ink Spot fashion . . . Ray Kinney isn't taking any chances on material with "Hawaiian Hospitality" and "To You Sweetheart Aloha" (Victor) . . . Buddy Clark, who scored heavily as the recent Paramount Theater headliner, sings with a swoon in his voice on "Passing By" and "An Apple Blossom Wedding" (Columbia) . . . Anita O'Day makes a tremendous and clever production out of "Ace In The Hole" (Signature) . . . Triple theater Dardanelle emphasizes her voice about her playing on humorous "You Gotta Crawl Before You Walk" (Victor).

'Cavalcade' Tells D. C. Story

26-Minute Program Weeks in the Mill

Discussing some "microscopic" points for tomorrow night's "Cavalcade of America" broadcast are Bernard Victor Dryer of Arlington, who wrote the script, and Dr. Alice Evans of Chevy Chase, about whose bacteiological studies the drama was written

By Sonia Stein

NBC's new program data book lists as "different each week" the writers for "Cavalcade of America." This fabulously expensive series, which has been "illustrating the best or the most typical aspects of American life, past and present," since October, 1935, would be in a fine fix if it didn't have a different writer every week.

Because "Cavalcade" scripts are not whipped up on the spur of the moment. These dramas, which take 26 minutes to broadcast, take weeks to write.

The producers want the scripts accurate and plan far enough in advance to permit writers to take as much time as necessary.

Tomorrow night's script, "Woman Alone," which will close this season for "Cavalcade," took several weeks of intensive work by one of radio's most competent writers, Bernard Victor Dryer.

The script, starring Jane Wyman (WRC-N.B.C., 8 p. m.), is the story of Dr. Alice Evans of 6601 Strathmore st., Chevy Chase, who discovered the relationship between a disease in human beings, now called undulant fever, and a germ in cow's milk.

In addition to holding lengthy discussions with Dr. Evans, Dryer read every word of every scientific paper Dr. Evans has written. These he estimates as "quite a stack."

Uranium's a Pipe

DRYER considers the important bacteriological studies made by Dr. Evans for the Public Health Service "one of the toughest, most obscure and complex subjects for a popular audience" he has ever tackled. And this statement comes from the man who reduced nuclear physics to a radio drama for the "Human Adventure" series in 1941.

"To do justice to scientific accomplishment and yet tell a human drama in 26 minutes is a challenge," Dryer admits.

But "Cavalcade" could scarcely have found a writer more able to meet such a challenge than Dryer, who majored in biochemistry as part of a pre-med course before he was drawn into the "47" Workshop course at Yale, where he studied playwriting.

The producers of "Human Adventure" (now being broadcast as "Exploring the Unknown" over WOL-Mutual Sundays) heard a poetic script he'd written for a New England network, found out he knew which end was up in science, and put him right to work.

Prepped for Invasion

SINCE then he has stayed close to the scientific path. During the war he produced medical films for the Navy, including one on bubonic plague, made in Africa. (American doctors who had little or no clinical experience with the "black death" needed these films in the event our troops landed in southern China, where the Japanese had sown plague-infested rice.)

He is still a film consultant to the Navy Bureau of Medicine and Surgery and to the National Cancer Institute, which is making films for the medical profession. (Dryer lives in Connecticut and Arlington, Va.).

A recent venture in Hollywood was a scientific psychological drama (temporarily shelved until a more propitious moment).

Dryer likes to get away from the "browbeating scientific accuracy" once in a while, and enjoyed doing a script last year for "Cavalcade" called "I Count the Days." This was pure fiction and earned the show its highest Hooper Rating for the year.

He is currently working on a novel, "Port Afrique," which is "a love story against the exotic background of French Africa," and to date has no test tubes in it.

From Blueprints

HE DOES, however, approach his work scientifically and plans it "much the way an architect plans a building."

Dryer likes to do a thorough job (to wit, his reading of all Dr. Evans' papers), because "if you want to hit the bull's-eye you have to know all the concentric rings around the topic."

He says he can afford this thoroughness because he's mixed up in so many projects—none of them with a weekly deadline.

His accuracy has not gone unnoticed. An anthology of radio plays, "Radio Drama in Action," which includes Dryer's script on atomic energy, mentions him specifically for scientific accuracy. The year he wrote most of the scripts for "Human Adventure," it won the Peabody Award.

And Dr. Evans, who has a scientist's disdain for slipshod work or half-truths, is pleased with Dryer's script. Considering that it involves her major contribution to science—and an extremely complex one—that's quite a compliment.

As the first woman president of the American Society of Bacteriologists, Dr. Evans has been written about many times and is more indifferent to this radio version of her life than most people would be, but she will be listening, she says.

introducing the band or the singers. They are both so skillful at badinage that this frayed doggerel doesn't sound half as bad as it ought to.

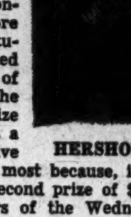
To wind up the show, Mr. Templeton and the chorus and orchestra performed a parody of "Oklahoma" in the manner of "Four Saints in Three Acts," that decidedly different operetta by Virgil Thomson and the GIs friend and adviser, the late Gertrude Stein.

This was one of those ideas that sounded hilarious when a couple of script writers started talking about it but which somehow didn't come off very well. Miss Stein's unusual notions about words simply can't be satirized, I'm afraid.

TEMPLETON, however, more than made up for this slight defection by a perfectly wonderful imitation of Spike Jones playing "April Showers." The pianist, who has an extraordinary set of vocal chords as well as nimble fingers, imitated the whole band all by himself. To repeat a suggestion I made last summer—

9000 Brain Children Swarm Dr. Christian's Word Clinic

O. K. So you didn't win the "Dr. Christian" script competition this year. Nine thousand other people didn't either.



HERSHOLT

Fifty thousand people wrote in for information for this sixth annual script contest and more than 9000 actually submitted scripts. One of them won the $2000 first prize.

But this is a more lucrative contest than most because, in addition to a second prize of $1000, the producers of the Wednesday night "Dr. Christian" series buy up at appropriate fees enough scripts for the year. So, in effect, there are 52 winners.

The winner of the first prize will be announced this Wednesday (WTOP-CBS, 8:30 p. m.), and the $2000 script will be presented the following week.

Choosing the winners is no simple task, according to Jean Hersholt, who plays the lead in the series. This year there were 627 scripts in the Class A or usable category. From the scripts which could be used, the judges (winners of the preceding five contests) chose the ones which would be used.

Although the contest is open to amateurs, 38 per cent of the scripts in Class A are written by professionals, and having a script accepted for the series has turned many a would-be scriptwriter into a professional.

Hersholt, who was in Washington early this week to discuss possibilities of an international meeting of motion picture artists and technicians under the sponsorship of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, which he heads, said the scripts show what America has on its mind.

Last year many of them were on rehabilitation. The year before they dealt with the return of servicemen from overseas. This year? Housing, naturally.

Wallace's Water Gate Talk on Five Stations

Henry Wallace's first major speech in Washington since his resignation from the Cabinet last fall will be broadcast over WINX, WINX-FM, WWDC, WWDC-FM and WOL tomorrow night at 10.

Wallace, speaking under auspices of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, will be introduced by Senator Claude Pepper. The address will be delivered at the Water Gate.

Heflin Blackjacked Into Hope Spot

Gumshoe Filling In for Gagman

THE much belabored private eye, Philip Marlowe, who turns up occasionally not much the worse for being the most blackjacked detective in the business, will turn up again Tuesday evening.

The program will be a summer replacement for Bob Hope at 10 p.m. over WRC-NBC.

Van Heflin has been assigned to play the rugged Marlowe, who is already known to motion picture fans from "Murder, My Sweet," "The Big Sleep," "Lady in the Lake" and "The Brasher Dubloon," which were based on Raymond Chandler books.

Heflin went to Hollywood from Broadway, where he played with Katharine Hepburn in "The Philadelphia Story." His career before that included the University of Oklahoma and Yale, and several summers as a merchant seaman sailing to the Orient, South America and Alaska.

SUMMER never means vacation time to Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians. In addition to regular weekday programs at 11 a. m. over WRC-NBC, the organization will take over for Fibber McGee and Molly Tuesday nights at 9:30 beginning this week.

"We, the People" moves to a new time slot at 9 p. m. Tuesday, June 24. It'll still be WTOP-CBS . . . Mike Hunnicutt, the rapid-patter morning man at WWDC, will move to WOL on July 7. Art Brown, who's been with WOL off and on for 10 years, will move into the afternoon spot with a four-hour Monday through Friday show of recordings, sports, chatter and Brown's organ solos.

THE FURTIVE FIGURE on the creaky stairs would be Philip Marlowe, or Van Heflin, if you please, the shamus who will summer in Bob Hope's shoes

ALTHOUGH contestants may enter the Miss Washington contest as late as July 5, WWDC, which is handling the contest again this year, has already started training the 24 girls now entered.

Helen Zimmerman, who assists Public Relations Man Rick La-Falce in contest arrangements, says they are an attractive lot—many of them college girls. And Helen's approval should mean something since she is (a) very attractive and (b) a former teacher at New York's best known beauty and success school.

THE Booker T. Washington Memorial Chorus has returned to WOL for its Saturday afternoon broadcasts at 5:30. Temporary absence was due to a union rule which prevented them from broadcasting—even though they do not get paid—without joining AFRA. The chorus decided that its work of encouraging the purchase of Booker T. Washington half dollars for the memorial fund was important enough to sacrifice the initiation fee required.

Tom Means, who used to be WOL's promotion manager, is now general manager of WFAK at Charleston, S. C. . . . Alex Drier, former war correspondent, will take Lowell Thomas' place on NBC when he switches to another network . . . Eddie Dowling will make his radio debut about July 20 over WRC-NBC with his own show, "The Big Break" . . . Parkyakarkus will make a series of movie shorts similar to his radio show, "Meet Me at Parky's" . . . Jack Smith will take over for Don Ameche on NBC for four weeks.

THE Georgetown University Forum of the Air, which is broadcast Sundays at 3:30 p.m. over WARL, will continue all summer. The Rev. Edward Powers, who has been directing radio activities for the school while the Rev. Francis Heyden has been in Brazil on the eclipse expedition, says the university is anxious to keep the forum going because it stimulates student interest in issues both in and out of academic life.

Radio Cash Prize Just a Starter For Schoolmaam

ALINE NEAL of Jackson, Miss., selected as the "Best Teacher of 1947" in the Quiz Kids contest, received the $2500 first prize on the program last Sunday, but other gifts and awards are still piling up. Thus far Miss Neal has received:

Twenty-five hundred dollars from the Quiz Kids program.

One hundred dollars and a set of encyclopedias from a book publisher.

Six hundred dollars worth of motion picture sound equipment for her school.

Five hundred dollars worth of dresses, hats, shoes, purses and gloves.

A complete set of luggage.

A check of undisclosed amount from the movie house where she has been taking tickets to augment her salary.

Enough orchids from admirers to start a small greenhouse.

She also has been promised a big raise in salary as soon as she completes work on her degree. And, should she want to change professions (she doesn't), during one week in Chicago she received an offer to model at Marshall Field's, a job offer from Elizabeth Arden and, by mail, an offer of marriage.

Extra Hour's Golden, Says WINX Bill

WHILE most newscasters plaintively sing, "give me five minutes more," Bill Gold grabbed off a full sixty.

"It certainly makes life easier," says Bill as he unravels himself from a nest of galley proofs at 11 p. m. when he goes on the air with "Post Preview" over WINX and WINX-FM.

For several months Bill had been broadcasting at 10. Between 5 o'clock, when the stories really start pouring in to the editors of The Post, and airtime, Bill had to scan as many as 100,000 words of news and feature copy and digest it for a fifteen-minute broadcast.

This, of course, is impossible to do in five hours. It is also impossible to do in six. However, Bill manages either way, but with six hours he has time to breathe. Short, occasional breaths, that is.

What Bill really likes about the change in time is that his preview of the next morning's Post can be more complete. "Most man-made news events are finished by 11," he says. This even includes after dinner speeches.

Adding an hour to his working day (he writes "The District Line" for The Post during the day) doesn't bother Bill at all; he's just sorry some of his early-to-bed listeners had to fall by the wayside.

CAPTAIN CHARLES STEWART
. . . suitably masculine and handsome

HANGING opposite Thomas Sully's portrait of Eliza Ridgely, "Lady With A Harp," is the National Gallery's newest acquisition, a portrait of Captain Charles Stewart by the same nineteenth century American artist.

Large vertical paintings, formal in style, they make an imposing pair. Both are gifts of Mrs. George Vetlesen, who gave the Ridgely painting in 1945. The female portrait is pale in color and somewhat artificial in manner. The Stewart, the second full-length portrait to be undertaken by Sully, is suitably masculine, a handsome work combining strength and dignity.

"Captain Stewart" became a rear admiral in the Civil War. When in command of the Constitution he was affectionately called, like his ship, "Old Ironsides." Stewart also fought in the War of 1812, and the portrait was completed by Sully in that year. His subject was then 33.

Mayan Art Discoveries Span Seven Centuries

By Jane Watson Crane

BY bringing to light long-hidden works of art the archeologists are continuing to discover America. The rainy season has ended 1947 field operations in Middle America and institutions are taking stock of the yield.

Today the Carnegie Institution of Washington announces the most recent finds of its division of historical research—Mayan art objects spanning some seven or eight centuries, all recovered from burials in a single mound near the village of Nebaj in the remote northern highlands of Guatemala.

This follows the sensational discovery of a series of Mayan Temples at Bonampak in the Mexican region of Chiapas, results of an expedition led by Giles Healey. Sponsored and financed by the United Fruit Co., it was carried out under authorization of the Mexican government and supervision of the Carnegie.

Priest or Ruler

AMONG the finds at Nebaj is a ninth-century breastplate which Dr. A. V. Kidder, chairman of the Carnegie's division of historic research, believes to be the finest single example of Mayan jade carving yet discovered. Apple-green and white, its carved surface depicts a priest or ruler, seated and in the act of addressing what might be a forerunner of the "forgotten man," rendered small in size and humble in attitude. Faces of Mayan gods are carved around the edge of the plaque. The grace and movement of the major figure is characteristic of the best Mayan art, when stone carvers showed incomparable skill with limited tools.

Other discoveries at Nebaj include a pottery figurine in the form of a whistle, also ninth century. The figurine, representing a priest wearing a birdlike headdress painted blue, shows a jade breastplate around his neck, neatly illustrating the way in which this article was worn.

A twelfth-century alabaster vase is a monument to early craftsmanship. The process involved "pecking" the vase to rough shape from the original block, grinding it from rough to finished form by hand, hollowing it out in the same fashion, and carving with stone tools the delicate fluting around the top portions.

Progress Over Centuries

EARLIER jade carvings (some by at least seven centuries), are less firm in outline and relief, indicating the advances made by these ancient artisans.

The site at Nebaj, where excavations will be continued next season, includes some twenty mounds, of which only two have as yet been opened. Grouped around plazas, they were once topped by temples and shrines. These it is believed were made of wood and thatch because of the frequent earthquakes in the volcanic highlands. No great stone monuments comparable to those at Chichen Itza are likely to be found here.

Living around Nebaj are present-day descendants of the Mayas, who still make daily sacrifices of flowers and incense before the mounds. Ceremonies, described as "curiously combining elements of Christian and pagan rituals" went on even while the mounds were being investigated. The Indians apparently made no objection to excavation of the burial places.

All the works found at Nebaj, under the leadership of A. Ledyard Smith of the Carnegie, have been placed in the Guatemala Museum at Guatemala City, as per agreement between the Guatemalan government and the institution.

Warned of Death Curse

IN 1945 Giles Healey, archeologist and photographer, made an expedition into the remote region of Chiapas, Mexico, to make a documentary film for the United Fruit Co. Here he lived among the Lacandones, who still worship in ancient Mayan temples, speak the Mayan language and make annual pilgrimages to the traditional holy city of Yaxchilan. The chiefs were most accommodating. They showed him how to reach the mountainside cluster of temples. And while they did not object to excavation, they darkly warned that invasion of the temples was an invitation to death.

This was in 1946, and the following year J. Eric Thompson went down with Healey to make a preliminary appraisal of the finds. In March a crew arrived by mule train with Karl Ruppert, specialist in pre-Hispanic architecture at the head, and the Guatemalan artist Antonio Tejeda, director of the Guatemalan National Museum, a member of the party. Engineer for the expedition was Gustav Stromsvik, Norwegian veteran of many Mayan excavations. Dr. Augustin Villagra represented the Mexican government.

Eleven temples were found, sufficiently well preserved for archeological study. Most exciting aspect is a series of brightly painted frescoes or wall paintings. About 1200 square feet of ancient Mayan life depicted in reds, yellows, ochres, greens, and blues, containing life-sized figures in full regalia. Expedition members declared them to be superior to any previously known folk art by a primitive people.

Two limestone altars were discovered, the larger of which Dr. Villagra says the Mexican government will try to fly to the National Museum in Mexico City.

In addition to Healey's photographs, Tejeda has made water color reproductions and drawings of the murals. Study and recording of all the finds is being conducted now by Healey in New York and the Carnegie Institution staff in Cambridge, Mass. The dilemma of the Mexicans is whether to try to remove the main frescoes from the walls for transportation, or to preserve and protect them where they are, making a landing field near the remote location so that those interested can get to the site. In the meantime the Lacandones, who still look upon the temples as holy places, remain their custodians.

Sunset Symphonies Start Thursday

By John Kearney

THIS Thursday night the National Symphony Orchestra will open its series of Sunset Symphonies at the Watergate.

Often described as the most beautiful outdoor setting in the world, the Watergate is truly worthy of a poet's quill. The audience is seated on steps leading from the Lincoln Memorial green down to a roadway which runs adjacent to the Potomac seawall.

An acoustical shell aboard a barge houses the orchestra and is moored about 30 feet from shore.

On the left flank is the graceful Memorial Bridge. Upriver on the right, spires of Georgetown loom darkly. A backdrop is formed by Virginia from green to blue and finally become black silhouettes.

The audience itself forms part of the setting. Many attend the concerts in canoes. And the canoe lanterns, dancing on the crest of the waves, resemble huge fireflies.

For the first concert, Mona Paulee, mezzo soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will sing "Me voici dans son boudoir" by Thomas, "Voi lo sapete" by Mascagni and a group of d'Hardelot, Dvorak and Delibes. Royal Fireworks music by Handel-Harty, the Andante from Howard Hanson's Nordic Symphony and Wagner's Rienzi Overture will be among the orchestral works.

Richard Bales, music director, will conduct the 80-piece orchestra.

Dr. Hans Kindler, founder of the orchestra, will conduct the second concert Sunday. This will be his only local appearance at the Sunset Series. Mozart's Symphony in D major (Haffner) is on the program.

Gladys Swarthout is to appear later as guest artist. Also scheduled are the Gen. Platoff Don Cossacks.

An "All Tchaikovsky's" has been arranged. And the popular "Gershwin Memorial" concert will be given again this season.

The concerts, all of which begin at 8 p. m., will be given Tuesdays, Thursday and Sundays throughout June and July.

Vatican Choir to Sing Here

THE Vatican Choir of 60 singers will make a world premiere appearance at Griffith Stadium, Sunday, August 3. Coming direct from Vatican City, the group plans a three-month tour of the United States.

Permission to make the trip under the name of "Roman Singers of Sacred Music" has been obtained from Pope Pius XII through the Papal Secretary of State. The Right Rev. Msgr. Licinio Refice, will direct the choir. Cassocks and surplices will be similar to those worn traditionally in Vatican Church Choir lofts.

Following their Washington engagement, the Vatican group will appear in New York at the Metropolitan Opera House and again at Madison Square Garden.

STUDENT RECITALS this week include a group to be presented by Eva Whitford Lovette, at 5 p. m. today at the Musical Art Center, 1325 G st. nw. Miss Lovette will be assisted by Violet Breeding, studio accompanist, and Mrs. John Cuno, who will accompany her daughter, Nancy Cuno. Others to be heard are Helen Dunbar, soprano soloist at the Sixth Presbyterian Church; Carolyn Schulte, Magenta Carney, Faye Moler Gibbs and Christine Shipman.

TONIGHT, pianist Douglas Johnson will be heard at the National Gallery in Haydn's Sonata in E flat major, Prokofieff's Third Sonata, and a group of Chopin, Debussy and Liszt.

Unsung Peary Aide Honored In Biography

Dark Companion. By Bradley Robinson. McBride. 266 pp. $3.50.

FOR not finding the North Pole (but shamelessly claiming that he did Dr. Frederick A. Cook earned wild applause, tens of thousands of dollars and ultimate ignominy.

For discovering the Pole on April 6, 1909, Robert E. Peary after several bitter years was made a rear-admiral and retired at full pension, his place in history secure.

For discovering the Pole with Peary, Matthew Henson, a Negro, was given a civil service messenger's job at which he labored at poor wages for a quarter of a century until earning a late retirement of barely $1000 a year.

Such are the rewards of an ungenerous and prejudiced public.

But the great Arctic explorers know who Matthew Henson is, and three of them have written glowing introductions to this biography of the brilliant octogenarian who may still be seen occasionally at the Explorers Club in New York.

Peter Frouchen says, "To the Eskimos, who loved him, Matt was the greatest of all the men who came from the distant Land of the South."

Commander Donald B. McMillan adds, "Henson, strong physically, and above all fully experienced, was of more real value to our Commander than Bartlett, Marvin, Borup, Goodsell and myself put together. Matthew Henson went to the Pole with Peary because he was a better man than any one of us."

Vilhjalmur Stefansson adds his weight to that of Henson's chief when he reveals that Peary always referred to Henson, "as the best traveler whom he had known, the most nearly indispensable man."

Few Americans know this almost mythological Negro who began life as an illiterate cabin boy, virtually taught himself all the rudiments, joined Peary on his first expedition into Nicaraugua, and for 18 years "stormed the frozen wastes" of the far north with his friend and chief, eventually standing with him at the North Pole as the two, surrounded by a few Esquimaux, raised the American flag.

This quiet, dignified, but compelling life story of Matt Henson puts him in a category with Dr. Carver and Booker T. Washington as one of the great men of his race (or any race). It may help to right an old wrong while Henson still lives in dignified poverty. It certainly proves that without Henson, Peary would never have lived to reach the Pole.

Bookstore Squeezing Out Its Happy Owner

By William J. Conway

CHICAGO, June 14 (AP).—A postman recently delivered a letter, addressed in red and blue crayon, to Artie Byrne, "care of the world's best, biggest and most confused book store."

Artie, the proprietor, makes no claim to primacy on the first two points, but he cheerfully acknowledges that order long since has been overwhelmed in his bizarre establishment.

Byrne, a bookman for 40 of his 54 years, has accumulated a mountain of miscellany. There are books of varying vintage, mail order catalogues dating back to the early 1900's, calendars, valentines, paintings, cylindrical and flat phonograph records, fading reference works on railroads, law, medicine, sports, religion.

There are dime novels, quaint Christmas cards, timetables, theater programs, 1900-1912 Sunday comic supplements, circus and World War I posters, aging telephone and business directories, an 1877 ship's log, canceled checks made out to the Chicago Cubs of 1923—autographed, among others, by Grover Cleveland Alexander.

Words and Music

BUT the heaviest tonnage is in books. They are sardined into ceiling-high shelves. They are stacked, hip-deep, up two flights of steps. They are heaped on the floors of 16 rooms on the second- and third-story levels—even in two chambers originally set aside for sheet music and wallpapered with such period pieces as "Sweet Adeline" and "Paddlin' Madeline Home."

When the avalanche of print overtaxed Artie's capacious, stove-heated store at 1561 North Wells st., he opened another outlet at 102 West North ave. Now the letter-press landslide has invaded his bachelor hotel room to such an extent that he has to thread between piles of volumes to reach his bed.

"I guess I have a quarter million items," Artie says, with a casual glance at cartons of tomes he never got around to opening. His latest acquisition is Wilbur, a cat.

"He hisses at customers," Artie says. "I hate customers, too."

But, it develops, the bookman is discriminating in this dislike.

Artie is a middle-size, voluble man. His hair is graying. He has a protruding lower lip that spews words like a fire hose squirts water. His rapid speech mingles elegant and inelegant language in a rich blend. He wears a dusty, baggy brown suit, and favors somber brown shirts.

Remote Control

HIS telephoneless stores are a block and a half apart. They are open from 10 a. m. to 1 a. m., but Artie spends a minimum of time in them. Instead, he sits in either of two restaurants that command a view of his emporiums. When he sees a known collector or dealer entering one of them, he pats across the street and makes a sale.

Artie leaves the routine trade to his clerks, who adhere to the low-pressure policy that "the books have to sell themselves." Strangers who want the personal attention of the proprietor can meet him by appointment, wait for him or look for him in the coffee shops.

He spends hours searching for books at auction sales and in homes disrupted by death or divorce.

"I'd rather buy than sell, anyway," Artie explains.

Seated in a cafe, enjoying his second afternoon snack, he philosophizes:

"The book business isn't a business—it's a disease. I don't know anybody who ever recovered from it. But I fare well enough to live in a style to which I am unaccustomed."

Then, reaching for another sugar-coated cruller, he adds:

"I eat six or eight times a day."

Bridge Table

Team of Four Tourney Ends Wednesday

By Marian H. Barre

FINALS in the Washington Bridge League annual championship for teams of four will be played at 8:15 p. m. Wednesday at Hotel Burlington. Leaders in the opening round of the game, held June 4, were J. D. David Murray, Miller Roberts and G. L. Dickerman, who won 16½ matches for a two-board lead over Miss Kathleen McNutt, Mrs. Katherine Moorman and Mr. and Mrs. John Darsey.

The team of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Hamlin, Alfred Stidham and L. R. Watson, jr., finished in a tie for third place with Mrs. Edna Evans, Simon Gerber, Martin May and Jack Melcher, both lineups having 14 matches. Thirteen teams make up the field, which is the cream of the local bridge world.

A pair game played concurrently with the initial team session was won north-south by Miss Edith Gordon and A. C. Mole; east-west by Mrs. L. L. Gibson and Mrs. Harold Young. Miss Gordon and Mole, who are newcomers in the duplicate field, had 142½ match points, while runnersup G. R. Edelin and J. T. Thomas had 142. Top score east-west was 152½, giving the winners a 3-point lead over John Fletcher and Mr. Lingley. Twenty-eight duos made up this unexpectedly large section.

Euclid Studios monthly masterpoint event will be held at 1 p. m. Saturday. Reservations should be made through Columbia 7857.

National award winners in the Agriculture Bridge Club on June 7 were Mrs. Dora Schwartz and Col. M. J. Haas, and Mrs. Edna Evans and Sumner Marcus. Runnerup awards went to Mrs. Marianne Boschan and Mrs. Frederick Eberson; Charles Deier and E. J. Hornick. The club's next game will be an evening session on June 25, when members' friends may participate.

New Trophy Up

THE handsome new J. G. Stone trophy, in competition for the first time, is the added stimulus in the interleague team matches between the Federal outfit and the Maryland Bridge League, which begin Tuesday at Pierce Hall.

Duplicate practice classes held under the sponsorship of the District of Columbia City-Wide Recreation Department closed last Monday at Thomson School. Three series contests were held during the nine-month session. Winner of the final contest was Miss C. Edmondson, who had an average percentage of 60.4. Miss Ethel Snyder finished second with 55.6 per cent.

Hal Siegal won the first series, Robert Hannings the second, each man in turn playing runner-up to the other. After this record they "graduated" to expert games. Among other players who received their first training at Thomson are Miss Edith Gordon, a winner in the Washington Bridge League; Paul Kalavski, now a junior master; Mesdames Rinker and McMurray, Miss Beatrice Gittens, Miss Lillian Walsh, Mrs. Kornrich, Miss Irma Fuhrer, Hallock and Levine.

The practice class will be resumed in September.

Local experts have three titles to defend in the Carvel Hall tourney which opens at Annapolis July 4. They are the mixed pair championship, held by Mrs. D. H. Mott and Leroy Thurtell; men's pairs, won by Lewis and Lloyd Tubbs, and the women's title, where Mrs. Edward Cotter and Mrs. Sybil Newlands, the 1946 defenders, tied with a former Capitalite, Mrs. Theresa Pestell, who was paired with Mrs. Harry Glick of Pittsburgh.

Players attending the tournament will have a better chance of getting hotel accommodations now that the Naval Academy is back on prewar schedule and 50 per cent of the middies will be on sea duty.

Victors Lose, Too, in This War Story

THE GALLERY, by John Horne Burns (Harper; $3).

THE TIME is August, 1944; the place, the Galleria Umberto in Naples, the glass roof of the huge arcade blown out by the bombs but the bars and shops open; the characters are Kiwis, Frenchies and Ayrabs, but mostly the GIs, the boys with the money, or the cigarettes, chewing gum, canned food or clothes that passed for money, and the Eyeties, the people without money, without anything.

Most Americans "figured it this way: These Ginsoes have made war on us, so it doesn't matter what we do to them, boost their prices, shatter their economy and shack up with their women."

As heartsick an author as I've read in a long time, Burns gives us some of his sickness; we share his sadness and sorrow as he unfolds before us the unhappiness and wretchedness of the khaki-clad conquerors and the civilians whom they treat as conquered. The Italians used to have something, he believes; it wasn't money, or the convenience of civilization, but life and love . . . which is what Stendhal was saying a century ago.

With the dollar sign for the high sign, the boys wandering in and out of the gallery took the girls who gathered there. Somehow the things we thought we stood for got completely lost. Under the distant skeleton roof it ceased to be a war for democracy, or even against fascism, it was at best a war to win, and the loot was right out of the living hide of the man and woman and child whom the GI scorned.

There's a youthful, untempered zest about this novel that places it high on the list of fiction inspired by World War II.—W. G. ROGERS.

Religious Club Picks 2 Books

FOR July the Religious Book Club has chosen a double selection—"How You Can Find Happiness," by Samuel M. Shoemaker (E. P. Dutton, $2), and "Primer for Protestants," by James Hastings Nichols (Association Press, $1).

For August the primary club selection will be "Christianity Today," a symposium edited by Henry Smith Leiper (Morehouse-Gorham, $5).

Dr. Shoemaker's book is the fruit of his experience in aiding hundreds of individuals during his years as rector of Calvary Church (Episcopal) in New York. "Primer for Protestants" is a concise appraisal of what Protestantism means in the modern world, written by the dean of students at the Divinity School, University of Chicago.

The editor of the symposium, "Christianity Today," is an executive of the World Council of Churches. His book is the only up-to-the-minute survey of the state of organized religion throughout the world which has been prepared since the war. Chapters were prepared by acknowledged authorities from each country.

Riffling the Magazine Rack

COLLIER'S release to newspapers on the Jim Farley series, already covered in our news columns, adds a humorous note to the occasion. "He writes in a calm but critical manner of the New Deal President," the notice stated.

Farley's account of his break with Roosevelt has all the calm of a hurricane at sea. Every sentence vents the pent-up emotion of eight bitter years and affection unrequited.

Farley makes no secret of the cause of a lot of his bitterness. He comes right out at the beginning and says, "Strange as it may seem, the President had never taken me into the bosom of the family, even though every one agreed I was more responsible than any other single man for his being in the White House. Never was I invited to spend the night in the historic mansion."

His relationship with Mrs. Roosevelt is made clear when he quotes her as saying, "Franklin finds it hard to relax with people who aren't his social equals." Picture Farley brooding about that for a few years, and later events are not surprising.

There is a real will in this first article to destroy the standing of the late President whom he claims to have created. But if one can credit any objectivity, it also offers some interesting historical notes on the court-packing fight.

THE NEW YORKER has done another great service—as great in its way as John Hersey's "Hiroshima"—with Rebecca West's report on the Greenville, S. C., lynch trial. Miss West has made a specialty of reporting trials recently. She reported the trials of two English traitors for the New Yorker, as well as the Nuernberg trials, all in her peculiar, rather flowery but magnificent style. Her stories have become models of magazine reporting, that kind of coverage which no newspaper can give or wants to give but which is so important to the over-all picture.

In describing the delirium in the courtroom following the acquittal of the defendants, Miss West says: "There could be no more pathetic scene than these taxi drivers and their wives, the deprived children of difficult history, who were rejoicing at a salvation that was actually a deliverance to danger."

HOUSEWIFE, career girl, part-time worker or idle bridge player, that mythical and much-discussed figure, the American woman, is written up in Life this week. Frances Levison summarizes the millions of words of advice handed the woman trying to plan her way of life, finally concludes it's an individual problem.

American men also get a going over. Life takes a class reunion history—Princeton '32—and makes a good general interest story out of it. Maitland Edey, a member of the class, concludes that its unusually high income results from depression training. Phi Beta Kappa men earn more now than varsity letter men, Edey finds, but those few who combine both earn most of all.

The class of '32 is 91 per cent married, but with only 1.7 children per man is not reproducing itself. Members are interested in reading and family affairs. Drinking leads the list of avocations and "the husbands are somewhat scornful of their wives' interests, particularly their passion for club activities." As a group they are irreligious, have produced no artists of any kind. They are now, as then, very Republican, but would elect Stassen before Dewey with Marshall as third choice.

IT TOOK nine years of praying before Msgr. Fulton J. Sheen converted Louis Budenz from Communism to Catholocism, Gretta Palmer relates in Look. She tells of Father Sheen's many amazing conversions and of the crusading ardor with which he goes about them, but omits the story of her own. Miss Palmer went to see Msgr. Sheen about a magazine article and she herself was converted.

"THIS will not be an autobiography, but a report," Admiral William F. Halsey prefaces his story starting this week in the Saturday Evening Post. "Bull," he says, is a tag the newspapers tied on him. "It is Bill Halsey whom I want to get on paper, not the fake, flamboyant 'Bull.'"

He tells of his difficulties getting into Annapolis, his mediocre intellectual career and his only slightly better football record, and ends the first installment with his first meeting with Franklin Roosevelt, then Assistant Secretary of the Navy, whom he describes as almost a professional sailor.

The Washington Philatelist

Stamp Dealers Made a Million, Too

By William M. Stuart

THE Centenary International Philatelic Exhibition is still the main topic of conversation in stamp circles. It was undoubtedly the greatest stamp show ever held and will be talked of for some time to come.

The exhibition was primarily a display of postage stamps and a tribute to the United States centennial of the first adhesive stamps. The financial figures of the show were exceptional and certainly unexpected, especially by the average stamp collector.

The Postoffice Department established a branch philatelic agency at the exhibition where three new varieties of stamps, as well as many commemoratives were sold. The department received a total of $1,014,184.12 from 35,450 purchasers, and it is safe to assume the majority of these stamps will be used for collections, not postage.

While the postal service benefited greatly from these sales, it might be interesting to note that dealers sold probably a million-dollars' worth of stamps during the exhibition for stamp collections only.

Word From Congress

ACTING Second Assistant Postmaster General John J. Gillen, representing the United States at the Twelfth Congress of the Universal Postal Union at Paris, has returned for consultation but will go back to Paris shortly. He said that a United Nations committee would meet with the congress but would not say whether this means United Nations stamps.

France has honored the congress with a new series of pictorial stamps. A 350-franc, brown, shows the colonnade of the Louvre; 4.50-franc gray, pictures the Conciergeric; 6-franc, red, "La Cite;" 10-franc, blue, Place de la Concorde, and 500-franc, green, an air view of Paris and its bridges. Frank Pace, jr., also a United States delegate, has been elected a vice president of the congress.

The prospectus of the exhibition at the twenty-sixth annual convention of the Precancel Stamp Society, to be held at the Shoreham August 21-24, has been issued by Dr. Chester R. Uhler, chairman, 839 17th st. nw. Exhibits must be in the hands of the chairman by August 20. Entries close August 1. There will be five sections.

There also will be a donation auction and a large bourse. J. H. Weimer, 3150 16th st. nw., is auction chairman and E. G. Jewell, Damascus, Md., is in charge of the bourse. Maj. C. C. Fisher is publicity chairman. The Capital Precancel Club will be host to the convention.

Here and There

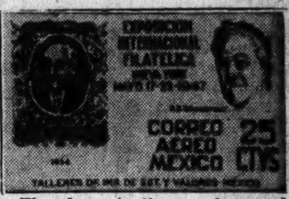
J. O. PEAVEY was speaker at the Thursday meeting of the Silver Spring Philatelic Society in the Board Room of the County Building, with President Horace Jones in the chair. The next meeting will be held June 26.

The 10th national stamp exhibition of the Associated Stamp Clubs of Southeastern Pennsylvania and Delaware will be held October 24-26 at Town Hall, 150 North Broad st., Philadelphia.

On the occasion of the first-day sale of the 3-cent Doctors' stamp at Atlantic City, June 9, at the banquet of the American Medical Association, Third Assistant Postmaster General Joseph J. Lawler said that the painting on the stamp "symbolizes the doctor, whether he be in the laboratory, the hospital, or in some isolated spot. But, wherever he is, the stamp is an expression of gratitude and thanks to him from his Government for the part he has played in making our Nation and its people strong and healthy in body, and in mind and heart."

Mexican Tribute

MEXICO issued a series of stamps in honor of the centennial of the first United States adhesive and in tribute to the late President Roosevelt. Each of the five stamps is inscribed, "Exposicion Internacional Filatelica," and three air mails are additionally inscribed "Nueva York Mayo 17-25, 1947."



The denominations, colors and designs are as follows: 10-centavos, brown, reproduction of Mexico's first stamp and portrait of President Roosevelt; 15-c., green, reproduction of the United States Washington stamp of 1847 and the seal of Mexico; airmails, 25-c., light blue, and 1-peso, red and blue, Mexico's first stamp and Roosevelt portrait; 30-c., black, Washington stamp and Mexico's seal.

At the Tuesday meeting of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., nominations for the ensuing year were made. Other nominations will be in order at next Tuesday's meeting and the election will be June 24. C. B. Vaughan's collection of British official stamps also will be on exhibition June 24 at Pythian Temple.

France has issued another commemorative. The 1947 "Journee du Timbre" or "Day of the Stamp" issue pictures Francois Michel le Tellier, Marquis de Louvois. He was Superintendent of Posts from 1668 to 1691, the date of his death. He was War Minister under Louis XIV and was the first to organize a standing army for France. The stamp is printed in red and valued at 4.50 plus 5.50 francs.

Conant's Science Is Single-Track

On Understanding Science, by James B. Conant (Yale University Press; $2).

On behalf of the man in the street, bewildered by the rushing headline achievements of science today, Dr. Conant sets forth his idea for a course of instruction which he feels will end much confusion and misunderstanding.

By taking a few historic examples of scientific research and working them over thoroughly in the classroom, the president of Harvard University says, the lay student can attain a far clearer and more useful concept of scientific achievements than if the attempt is made—as it usually is—to provide understanding through mathematics and vast detail. In other words, though he may not see the individual sapling of new advance in detail, he will have a far better sense of proportion and be able to fit it more judiciously into the forest perspective. Dr. Conant documents his thesis by detailing broad developments of seventeenth and eighteenth century science.

Eden Ancestor Wields Still-Brilliant Rapier

A New Jane Austin Dissects Victorians

By Sterling North

The Semi-Detached Couple. By Emily Eden. 250 pp. $2.75.

CAN you believe that an unsung Jane Austin has just been rediscovered? That a satirical wit almost as sharp as William Makepeace Thackeray's has just been unearthed from the dusty archives?

It is 117 years since the dashing Emily Eden laid aside her quill pen, put her manuscript in a drawer, and for 30 years proceeded to ignore it. After all, she had little time for literature between parties at the great houses, trips to India, and other divertissements among the ruling families of England.

In 1860, prefaced by a humble little apology to younger readers, her comedy of manners was published. It was as fresh and stinging as the day she wrote it, and is just as delightful today.

Anthony Eden, a collateral descendant of the author, has written a somewhat stuffy and prideful preface which should not prejudice American readers to the point of dropping the book. With a keen political eye to the advantage of showing off his ancestors, he reminds us that Emily Eden was the daughter of one of William Pitt's most brilliant ambassadors, niece of the last Colonial Governor of Maryland and sister of Lord Aukland, Governor General of India.

Actually these facts are important for only one reason; they gave Emily Eden a chance to view at closes range the most astonishing and amusing gang of polite pirates that ever built an empire.

Naturally Emily Eden's point of departure in criticizing this society is neither "liberal" nor democratic. She herself was part and parcel of the milieu which spawned the Eskdales and Douglases and Teviots of this book.

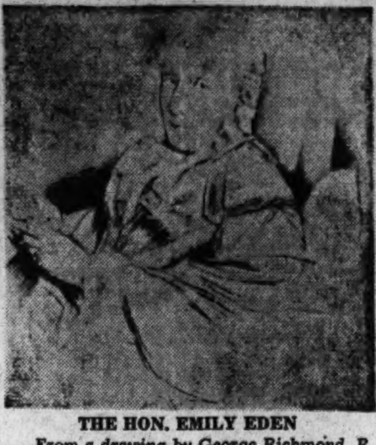
But she does not suffer fools gladly, view rich wastrels with tolerance, or take to her bosom the wasp-tongued females who dealt in extramarital flirtations and malicious gossip. And her political satire is brilliantly biting and astute, giving us the best picture in English literature of a pre-Reform Bill election, with its subtle bribery and County Family electioneering.

Her attitude is one of warm tolerance for the average wealthy English family such as the Eskdales, with their three charming daughters and upstanding son. She follows all the romances in the community with the sprightly interest of an eager maiden, bringing them all to happy conclusions in the most approved early Victorian tradition.

But almost every line is hypoed with controlled venom when she introduces a female cad like Lady Portmore, and she has no scales over her eyes while etching Mrs. Douglas.

The central story concerns the "semi-attached couple": lovable and lovely young Helen from the Eskdale menage married to the terrifically wealthy young Lord Teviot. Although no bedroom scenes are permitted, and sex never once raises its lovely head, a modern psychologist could tell you why the couple was semiattached so long and why finally they were very lovingly and fully attached.

The number of servants in this book, the number of country houses per country gentleman, and the almost complete absence of taxes to cut into the fabulous incomes, should make for envy among readers who like escape literature. One young man with six castles had 120,000 pounds a year (a modern equivalent of about $2,500,000 when purchasing power is taken into consideration). Not only no one in England, but no one in America has a fraction of this spendable income today.



THE HON. EMILY EDEN
. . . From a drawing by George Richmond, R. A., by permission of Messrs. McMillian & Co., Ltd.

Jane Austin, as the jacket of this book boldly intimates, was only a magnificently talented country girl who really didn't know Emily Eden's set. There is no particular reason for making a snobbish pitch, however. Both were unparalleled observers of their time. And Emily Eden in particular uses her knowledge and her literary style as a precision tool, or possibly a polite but lethal weapon.

The Second Forty Years. By Edward J. Steiglitz, M. D. (Lippincott), 317 pp. $2.95.

THERE are between thirteen and fourteen million people in the United States over the age of 60. The average life span has increased from 21 years in the days of the Holy Roman Empire to something over 65 today. There is a real danger that soon America will be a semisenescent Nation.

What can we do to be certain that our older citizens do not outlive their usefulness and mental vigor, becoming a burden to themselves, the working community and the democratic processes?

Dr. Stieglitz, author of 82 medical texts and one of America's foremost authorities on geriatric medicine (the diagnosis and management of disease in the aging and aged), offers 317 pages of valuable suggestions.

This is no fabric of moonbeams and Freudian wish-fulfillment such as we have had from the "Life Begins at Forty" variety of author. Dr. Stieglitz makes it clearly evident that the incidence of cancer, circulatory diseases, mental and nervous disorders goes up with age. But senescence is not necessarily tragic.

Reasonable care of the body, moderation in eating, drinking, smoking and exercise; a vigorous and continuing interest in the arts, sciences, literature, travel or hobbies; a continuing life of usefulness—all these will make life pleasant sometimes into the eighth and even ninth decade.

Except in cases of actual disease to the brain tissues, senility will not be the final goal of any except those who have been little more than infantile throughout life. A few can even hope, like Oliver Wendell Holmes, to start studying Plato in their 90's "to improve their minds."

Longevity is not enough, as this author points out. A nation of senile malcontents is a nation ready for the junk heap. Individuals must plan their own autumnal years with intelligence and care. The medical profession and the Government must help to make our huge population of oldsters healthier, happier and more useful.

Preventive medicine has done us an ill turn if all it has done is to prolong useless, nonfunctional and painful life into what will soon be (on the average) the seventh decade. Readers approaching 40 or past that mark cannot afford to miss this book.

The Innocent Eye. By Herbert Read. Holt. 268 pp. $3.50.

"THE Innocent Eye" is an excellent name for this pellucid but naive attempt at a world view. It is innocent of direction, innocent of logic, innocent of form, innocent of balances and utterly innocent of common sense.

Herbert Read imbibed of Nietzsche in his nonage, thus acquiring a taste for romanticism which is likely to be more habit-forming than hashish. That he now finds himself wallowing in surrealism (while embracing (1) anarchism as a long-term objective, (2) socialistic democracy as a short-term objective, (3) romanticism as a transcendental leap into the creative unknown) indicates to any rational reader that the man is a hopeless dilettante.

The volume starts out innocently and charmingly enough with several warm, lyrical chapters on his half-remembered childhood on a large farm in the Vale (a shallow, fertile basin among the Yorkshire moors and wolds). The description of his earthy, lamplit childhood is nostalgic without being sentimental.

He is still writing sound, sensitive autobiography in the English mode (see Aldington, Sassoon, et al.) while revealing the horrors of public school and the drudgery of his three years as a bank clerk. But the minute he starts to think (instead of merely perceiving) the book becomes confused, contradictory and intellectually flighty.

His poetry is easily as bad as that of most of the other imagists of the First World War. He is so critically unselective as to admire both Tennyson and Hopkins. Within the space of a very few years he is devout Christian, then unbeliever; conservative then Marxist; antiromantic classicist and unabashed romantic.

His thinking reveals overreading and underdigesting to the point of chronic mental dispepsia. In fact the book is a hodgepodge of secondhand ideas taken from Nietzsche, Kant, Plato, Haecker, Kierkegaard, Pascal, St. Augustine, Traherne, Bergson, Carlyle, Ruskin, Morris, Marx, Bakunin, Kropotkin, the collectivists, syndicalists, anarchists, the medieval Christian mystics, the Eastern mystics and trade union propaganda sheets.

All anarchists are incurably romantic, overemphasizing as they do the natural goodness of man (Rousseau's dubious "noble savage") and the Utopia which would automatically ensue upon the destruction of the state. But Herbert Read, bitten by both Carlyle and Marx, is in my opinion following the obscure trail toward national socialism despite his avowed hatred of tyranny.

Only one form of government rises from Mr. Read's beloved anarchy, and that is ruthless dictatorship.

GEORGE TABORI
. . . A near masterpiece

Tabori's Tempo

A Sandstorm Keys an Opus About Guilt

Original Sin, by George Tabori (Houghton Muffin), 195 pp. $2.75.

THOSE who have read the two previous novels by this young Hungarian writer, "Beneath the Stone" and "Companions of the Left Hand," know that his forte is an almost symphonic use of words and story themes to build through counterpoint a rising flood of emotion which he hopes will engulf the reader.

The extent to which he succeeds depends largely upon the willingness of the individual reader to be carried away by such a device.

The three movements of the present composition are (1) Mea Culpa, (2) Mea Culpa, (3) Mea Maxima Culpa—an insistence upon guilt which should give an excellent clue as to who committed the almost perfect crime around which the book is written.

The story is told by Tristan Manasse, owner of a pension in Cairo. His wife, Adela, is found dead in the bathtub during an insufferable khamseen, bringing sand and heat from the desert. Just as in Norman Douglas' "South Wind," in which the sirocco deeply affects the major characters, this desert-bred sandstorm strikes like the breath of doom, hot, suffocating, maddening.

Tristan Manasse tells his story three times in a manuscript meant only for his own eyes. Each time he retells the story we get deeper into his character and deeper into the true nature of the crime. Tabori almost, but not quite, manages his exciting tour de force. Had he been a deeper student of psychology, and had he integrated Part Three more perfectly with Parts One and Two, he would have a small masterpiece.—S. N.

Dixie's Rich in Yarns and Scripts

A Magnolia Movie Cycle Looms

HARNETT KANE is in the enviable position of having five film companies bidding for screen rights to "New Orleans Woman" while various Hollywood firms are making mercenary passes at two of his unpublished books, "The President's Wife" and a nonfictional tome on Natchez. He expects to make three film sales this month.

As Kane, Hartzell Spence and I sipped mint juleps in New York, the two Southern gentlemen matched stories of Dixie. Spence, author of "Vain Shadow," and his attractive wife own a 30-room Virginia mansion, but not the gate house. It seems a former owner, after drinking up one race horse after another, finally traded the gate house and an acre of land for a case of Scotch. At the present cost of Scotch that sounds like a pretty sharp bargain.

A curious yacht-shaped mansion on the hill above them was built by a coachman who was once refused dinner in their manse. Out of spite he went to New York, cleared up millions on the cotton market and returned to keep his promise to look down upon the people who once insulted him.

STETSON KENNEDY, author of "Southern Exposure," reports that Eugene Cook, attorney general of Georgia, will call him as a State witness in the suit to take away the KKK's charter.

"I intend to go, even though the Klan is offering $1000 a pound for my hide, FOB Atlanta," Kennedy said, adding "My friend 'Hummon' Talmadge recently told the John B. Gordon camp of the Sons of Confederate Veterans that of the books 'Tobacco Road,' 'Strange Fruit' and 'Southern Exposure,' mine was the 'most dastardly.'"

2-Cent Library

SPEAKING of Southern stories, here is one to warm the cockles of your heart. Herman Styler (who has told part of the story in the June issue of Coronet) writes that Willie Lee Buffington (Faith Cabin Library, Paine College, Augusta, Ga.) needs any books you can spare for his chain of 29 libraries scattered through South Carolina and Georgia.

Willie, a penniless white millhand, spent his last dime on five 2-cent stamps some years ago, wrote five letters telling of his plan to bring reading matter to poor Negroes, and asked that if no books were sent the stamps be returned so he could reach other donors. Four recipients ignored his letter and did not return the stamp. The fifth sent him 1000 volumes. He built Faith Cabin to house the books and began his dedicated life work, to bridge the gap between white and black and between literate and illiterate Southerners.

HARNETT T. KANE

Cabbages and Kings

LEWIS H. CONARREE, author of "Off My Sea Chest" (Holt), has very astutely resigned his Navy reserve commission before publication of his blistering, debunking attack on the Navy. The seagoing brass answered his letter of resignation by asking, "Are you sure you know what you are doing?" Conarree says that he knows very well what he is doing, and asks any Doubting Thomas to read at random any page in his book.

Robert J. Casey, whose portable typewriter was once fished out of the Red Sea and who knows more interesting people than any interesting person of my acquaintance, will write "More Interesting People" for October publication (Bobbs-Merrill). This is a sequel to "Such Interesting People."

Best new magazine on the stands is Script, a sort of Los Angeles New Yorker, which has all the charm, satirical wit and screwball insanity of the film capital. Robert L. Smith of the Los Angeles Daily News seems to be its principal guardian angel . . . "The 1947 Book of Knowledge Annual" (Grolier Society) promises that rockets will soon take scientists to investigate the other side of the moon. What about sending a few peaceful ones to investigate the other side of our own planet?

Edward H. Faulkner, who has attacked the moldboard plow as valiantly as Don Quixote ever attacked a windmill, now takes a resounding whack at commercial fertilizer. The land is being ruined by chemicals as much as by plowing, he insists. "A Second Look" (University of Oklahoma Press) is a sequel to Faulkner's vitriolic "Plowman's Folly."

—STERLING NORTH.

The Coffin Corner . . .

The Iron Clew. By Alice Tilton. Farrar, Straus. 238 pp. $2.50.

Leonidas Witherall, who fans will remember is the spitting image of William Shakespeare, gets involved once more in an out-of-this-world adventure with murder and a lot of brown paper packages at the bottom of the mix-up. It doesn't particularly matter that there are times when common sense flies out the window. Many writers try to combine humor and death, but few can compare with Alice Tilton in carrying the weird combination gracefully.

* * * *

The Case of the Missing Men. By Christopher Bush. Macmillan. 217 pp. $2.

A Scotland Yard man is invited to spend a long weekend with a famous mystery author and his literary agent. What started as a holiday ends with the murder of the author—after many mysterious goings-on. A wealth of well-drawn characters and plenty of likely suspects, with enough rough stuff to please all but the most bloodthirsty readers.

* * * *

Affair at Ritos Bay. By Muriel Bradley. Doubleday. 188 pp. $2.

Katie Jerome wasn't what one would label a "good" girl, and she and her boss were a bit brazen about their affair when they moved into the same summer place along the California coast. Katie's boss was somewhat of a snob in the beginning, and was carrying a flaming torch for a friend's wife. So naturally, he couldn't fall in love with Katie.

But murder changes a lot of human relationships, as every whodunit fan knows full well. Besides, the inspiration for the torch-bearing doesn't stand up too well on close examination. The conclusion is a bit obvious, both as to the love story and the mystery, but the combination is admirably suited for those who like sex and intrigue with their puzzle patterns.

A Nuernberg Notebook

Nuernberg Diary, by G. M. Gilbert (Farrar, Straus, $5).

THE vast transcript of the trial of the top Nazi war criminals is being broken down into a stream of books approaching the men and the evidence from every angle, but here is one based on no transcript except the day-to-day notes of the prison psychologist assigned to study the defendants in their behind-the-scenes reaction to the courtroom drama.

It is an absorbing picture of the mental approach of Goering, Hess and the others to their last dramatic roles—sometimes breaking down into soul-baring frankness under the pressure of the evidence, sometimes posing, sometimes lying just to "block" from their own minds the record of their iniquities.

A large part of the book is direct quotation of the defendants, with just enough comment from Gilbert for clarification and just enough references to the progress of the trial to provide background.

Here are Generals Jodl and Keitel, more worried at the revelation that Keitel had besmirched German military honor by passing on an order for the capture and death of the French General Giraud than over the atrocity murders of millions. "We determined that the King of Bulgaria was poisoned, you know. But I never thought that one of our own generals——" and Jodl's voice trailed off, and he quit eating at Keitel's table.

And Ribbentrop, reminded that if Hitler hadn't become so impatient, the industrial application of atomic power would have come to relieve all worries about Lebensraum, replies: "Do you think so? My word! It is a terrific thought . . . beyond conception . . . amazing. I don't think I shall be able to sleep tonight."

RESORTS SECTION VII

Hi-Ho! Away From Work We Go!

And We'll Spend 70 Million a Day

By Cynthia Lowry

SO you're planning that vacation, back to old-time haunts or to far-off horizons?

Well, here's the word from travel agencies and resorts:

Prices are high, facilities are short and the demand far, far exceeds the supply. Uniformly, the travel folk advise prompt action on reservations, whether you want to hibernate for that precious fortnight or go roaming by bus, train plane or auto.

Even this early in the season many popular resorts report full bookings for the entire summer. Last-minuters are going to find themselves with no place to go. Those with small and inflexible vacation budgets are going to see a world practically bounded by their own backyards.

More than 70 million dollars a day will be spent by Americans on vacations during June, July and August, according to an estimate made by Holiday Magazine after a survey of the vacation industry.

Sixty-two per cent of those questioned plan to travel within the United States; 32 per cent in foreign countries, and 6 per cent are undecided. Canada and Latin America will get the bulk of travel outside the United States; the Pacific States the largest portion (32 per cent) of those who plan domestic vacations.

Margaret Cone, director of a large travel agency (Sita, Inc.), reports an avalanche of travel interest with a considerable number of inquirers prepared to spend about $500 per person for a two-week jaunt.

Interest in plane travel is up 80 per cent for the summer, she said. Lots of people want to take cruises, but shipping space is short.

'Spread' Vacations Urged

TRAIN TRAVEL is popular, but summer reservations now are hard to get even though war-crowded conditions no longer prevail. There is also plenty of interest in bus travel.

The resorts themselves aren't too interested in the private automobile trade because they like vacationers who stay put and spend their money in one place.

Fred Dietz, executive director of the American Society of Travel Agents, said all popular prewar resorts from Lake Louise of Canada to the Great Smokies are open and proclaiming their attractions to the world.

"Nobody is expanding," he said. "Building costs are too high and seasons are too short. We are trying to handle the demand by persuading people to spread the usual vacation months from May through October, instead of all trying to crowd into July and August."

A number of States are promoting their vacation-lands to the tune of many advertising dollars. Maine, whose emphasis is on its "Desert of Maine" (pronounced like the last course of a meal and actually a mountain, not a sandy waste), is a national drawing card. Arizona is telling people that it is cool in the mountains in summer. Miami has resumed its prewar campaign to sell itself as a hot-weather paradise.

'Spread' Vacations Urged

AT New York City's recent travel show, which heralded the tourist joys at spots from Australia to Haiti and Holland, agencies admitted frankly that costs were out of line with pocketbooks.

Some travel agents, like Mrs. Thomas Larkin say that the past winter season in the South, resulted in dark-hued handwriting on the wall.

"The era of black-market spending is definitely over," Mrs. Larkin said. Two seasons ago in Miami people were throwing $1000 bills around and buying up all the de luxe trips we could arrange. Last season there was a very definite tightening of purse strings and people were actually asking what they'd get for their money."

Generally speaking, there's nothing new under the resort sun. Easterners still plan to pile into the Catskills, the Poconos and New England's Green Mountains.

Midwesterners will patronize their Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota lakes and rivers—and some of them will travel to both Western and Eastern coast spots. Cape Cod, for example, has become particularly popular with residents around St. Louis.

Pacific Coasters continue to prefer their own environs, some of them treking north to British Columbia.

The World's the Limit!

You Need 2 Weeks, A Passel of Mazuma

HERE ARE A FEW SUGGESTIONS, culled from travel and vacation sources, on what you can do for a price for two weeks. Where preliminary train travel is indicated, the type is coach, not sleeping; hotels are American plan.

FOR $500—A not-too-splashy transcontinental tour—a trip to Mexico, Guatemala or the Canadian Rockies for Easterners and to New England, the Smokies or historic Virginia for Westerners; cruises to the Caribbean with modest accommodations.

FOR $400—Shorter cruises, like Caribbean trips out of Southern ports. Cargo-boat trips to Havana, Haiti or Honduras, out of New Orleans; Ohio River boat from Cincinnati to Chattanooga; excellent hotel accommodations in any of the popular places from Atlantic City to Santa Barbara.

FOR $300—Plane trips to Bermuda or Havana from New York, conducted tour of the Great Smokies; comfortable accommodations at top-flight resorts; National Parks tours (Yellowstone, Yosemite, Bryce and Zion are the most popular); bus or train to Montreal or Quebec from Chicago east.

FOR $200—Bus trip through Nova Scotia, West Virginia or the Smokies from Chicago east; resorts of the less expensive type and near home (out of Chicago to Minnesota lakes, for instance).

FOR $100—Visit friends, carrying adequate gifts.

Or bask on your local municipal beach, picnic at the side of the road; forgo a vaaction and save your money for 1948, when prices may be lower.

The Door Opens

Europe Says It's Okay to Come Now

By Sonia Stein

AMERICANS who have been clamoring "Open the Door, Anybody" since the war ended are beginning to glimpse some latch-strings, and to hear some creaking hinges as doors are swung open just enough for a few people to sidle through.

As far as their current distressed economies permit, European countries are extending a gladhand to their old friend, the American tourist.

Switzerland, least affected by the war, is naturally most able to play host this year. Because of tight transatlantic transportation problems, Switzerland had comparatively few American guests last year, although 1,200,000 people visited the famous resort country during the year.

Swiss hotels, inns and pensions which can accommodate about

Dude Ranch Is Tonic For Stale Professors

By Grace E. Ray

Associate Professor of Journalism, University of Oklahoma.

Why is a professor grading papers like a dog eating wienies? Because he is devouring his own substance in a mangled form.

THE foregoing riddle hints at one hazard in teaching. But why be morbid? Ordinarily a pedagogue, I become a cowhand in August. I visit Gothic, Grasshopper, Glacier, go up Mount Moran, the Sawtooths, Bitter Roots, or other points in dude ranch country. I sit on a saddle instead of a typewriter and ride ponies instead of students.

I've never yet encountered a quiz book in the Rocky Mountains. I've explored them in horse-drawn sheep wagons, station wagons, buses, narrow-gauge railways, on foot and by pack train.

I recommend dude holidays for stale Profs. Industrial tycoons, businessmen, lawyers, writers, Government gals, Congressmen and entertainers hide out on ranches for a change, so why shouldn't the mortar board and Phi Beta Kappa crew?

A dude vacation can be restful or rough and rustic—depending on location and kind of ranch. References are exchanged, to safeguard guests. Modern conveniences are available, good food served. Introverts may hole up in secluded cabins, and guests allergic to action may sit on cool verandas.

I mix my programs. I've been in the wilderness of Montana and Idaho, where I was not sure I would reach shelter for the night—but was ready to dig holes for hips and shoulders under a spruce tree. Big fish caught crowded out thoughts of my comfortable bed at the ranch. On pack trips in Canada, we saw no tracks except our own for a week. Dude ranchers are experienced woodsmen, and even in the snowy wilderness of Mount Leidy hunting region of Jackson Hole, Fred and Eva Topping, prevent inept city people from getting lost or damaged.

In Switzerland, you can ski in July

Chasing Little Dogies

NEXT August I will hibernate in the mountain camp of the Nine Quarter-Circle Ranch at Gallatin Gateway, Mont., coming out occasionally to chase little dogies or tour Yellowstone Park, only 7 miles away. Perhaps I'll fish in the park, for trout, white-fish and grayling.

I'll sleep 10 hours at night, then go for a dip before break-

Blossom Time in Virginia

Rhododendron Festoon The Blue Ridge Trails

WHETHER you pack the family jalopy with picnic basket or weekend case, swimming suit or mountain boots, Virginia and her rugged sister, West Virginia, offer ideal opportunities to make use of them.

A drive through the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia may take hours or days, depending on inclination. Valley hotels are open the year 'round and many of the cottages and cabins on Skyline Drive are now open.

Historic Charlottesville, in the heart of Virginia will be a particular center of interest on the Fourth of July when President Truman will speak at nearby Monticello, mountain-top home of Thomas Jefferson.

Not only was Albemarle County the lifelong home of Jefferson, but he built Ash Lawn, a few miles from Monticello, for his friend James Monroe. James Madison, who lived close by in Orange County, was a frequent visitor to both homes.

Purple Panoply

JUNE finds the Blue Ridge rhododendron at their fullest bloom. The Ridge Parkway, which runs through the mountains of western Virginia and North Carolina, has its best rhododendron displays concentrated in an area 50 miles north and 50 miles south of the Virginia-North Carolina line.

The plant grows in great masses up to 15 feet in height in nearly all the wayside recreational areas, including peaks of Otter and Rocky Knob in Virginia and Bluff, Cumberland Knob, Cascades and Crabtree Meadows in North Carolina. The most spectacular show is the one in Craggy Gardens, 15 miles north of Asheville, which is honored by the Rhododendron Festival.

If you want to take in the unique Barter Theater, the only State-supported theater in the country, it will run through the middle of September at Abingdon, in southwestern Virginia. The Martha Washington Hotel at Abingdon is open all year.

Resort prices in Virginia have not gone up this year as they did last. In southwestern Virginia and the Shenandoah Valley, hotel and tourist court prices range from $2.50 to $5 a person and American plan rates from $6 to $10. American plan rates at the beach run from $6 a day per person up to $14 a day single in the swankiest places.

Outdoor Drama

JUST outside Williamsburg, the Jamestown Corporation, in cooperation with the Virginia Conservation Commission, will present this summer a new symphonic drama by Paul Green, "The Common Glory." It will be staged in an open air theater on Lake Matoaka, within walking distance of the College of William and Mary.

For those to whom vacation means lazy waves reaming on hot sands, a new hotel and several new cottages have opened their doors at Virginia Beach, adding approximately 200 rooms to accommodations already offered.

There are sports to suit every taste at the Homestead at Virginia Hot Springs. There are two golf courses: the Homestead course, with long smooth fairways and gently rolling open spaces, and the trickier championship Cascades course 3 miles down the valley where the mountains close in to provide more hazards.

The eight tennis courts, lawn-bowling and putting greens and shuffleboard and croquet courts are located in the half crescent formed by the hotel sprawling on the hillside. For the galleries, there is the cafeteria style luncheon served from the casino to lawn tables.

Cabins at Premium

IN West Virginia, vacation cabins in six State parks and four State forests are completely equipped and may be rented by the week. Cabins in several parks are almost entirely booked for July and August.

West Virginia has 15 State parks and seven State forests. Largest State park is Watoga, in the mountains of Pocahontas County. An 11-acre lake, an arboretum and a large deer herd are special features. Cacapon State Park, near Berkeley Springs, where there is a swimming beach, attracts many visitors from Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia and the District of Columbia, especially on weekends.

Other parks with vacation cabins are Babcock, on U. S. 60, in Fayette County; Lost River, in Hardy

Accommodations Are Loosening Up

National Parks Are 'Roomier'

IF YOU have an urge for the wide open spaces this summer, the national parks could be your answer, for they are available by train, bus, or car.

Summer bookings are already heavy in such major parks as Yellowstone, Glacier, Yosemite, Grand Canyon, Bryce and Zion. Travelers who expect to occupy hotel, lodge or cabin accommodations will do wall to obtain confirmed reservations as soon as possible. Those who enter the parks without reservations are very likely to be disappointed, although the chances are better at the very beginning of the travel season and after Labor Day.

The amount of accommodations in the parks and monuments will be appreciably greater than it was last year. This is due only to a small extent to the provision of new facilities. In one important case, that of the Ahwanee Hotel in California's Yosemite National Park, it has resulted from the return of facilities from other uses. The Ahwanee was used during the war as a Navy convalescent hospital, and its use as a hotel was not resumed until last Christmas.

More Manpower

IN OTHER cases, additions have resulted from the rehabilitation of buildings that fell into disrepair during the war. In still others, notably at Yellowstone, there are expected to be more rooms and cottages available because of the prospect of sufficient help to operate them. The Yellowstone Park Co. last year had to close Camp Roosevelt, near Tower Falls, in midseason. This year some additional space will be provided at the old Lake Hotel, which was closed for several years before the war.

At Grand Canyon there are a number of new low-priced cabins. Big Bend in west Texas, newest of the family of 27 national parks, can take care of 40 to 60 visitors at one time. It also will operate a store handling a limited stock of groceries and campers' supplies, as well as gasoline, oil, towing and minor car repairs. These services are of special importance at Big Bend, which is far from the ordinary sources of supply.

In addition to the usual accommodations offered by the concessioners, who provide them under contract with the National Park Service, all of the national parks except Carlsbad Caverns in New Mexico, as well as many of the national monuments and some other areas in the system, offer free camp grounds for those who bring their own tents. In all of them it is possible to obtain supplies. In a few there is free firewood.

Many national park tours are scheduled this season by such well-known agencies as Cooks, American Express, Waters and Raymond Whitcomb of Boston.

Glacier is the only national park directly on the main line of a transcontinental railway, and Great Northern has scheduled daily passenger service to both entrances via the Oriental Limited.

America's Monarch Is World's Highest

MOUNT McKINLEY, America's crowning glory in Alaska, is scientifically figured as the highest mountain in the world. The mountain, which will become familiar to thousands yearly, in Alaska's vacation land of tomorrow, is 20,300 feet from its base to the top, but its rising from an elevation of only 2000 feet gives it the height distinction. The National Park is 3030 square miles, and was established by an Act of Congress in 1917.

This Is 50th Anniversary Of Steel Pier

ATLANTIC CITY, June 14 (AP). Steel Pier, one of America's most unusual show places, next week will mark the golden jubilee of a stunt-filled career that has been shared by an estimated 90 million persons.

The pier's operators have been digging into musty files for its colorful theatrical history. Another search may produce 50 persons who attended the opening June 18, 1898. The charge was 10 cents for adults and a nickel for children, to hear concert music by a Hungarian orchestra and martial airs by the First Regiment Band of Philadelphia.

In 50 years more than 20 million dollars was spent in remodeling the pier, built on iron pilings and steel girders. The present owner, George A. Hamid, estimates the establishment is worth two million dollars.

These are the pier's statistical features:

1. It can seat 12,000 persons in four theaters, a ballroom, an outdoor stadium, an exhibit hall and in lobbies.
2. More than 150,000 of the pier's 280,000 square feet are closed and air-conditioned. The 24,000 square-foot ballroom is one of the country's largest.
3. More than 20,000 persons can be entertained at the same time without crowding. Almost 80,000 visited the pier on the Sunday before Labor Day last year.
4. Three motion pictures, vaudeville, a circus, an aquacade, dancing to a "name" band, a wax museum, fun-houses, side-shows, and industrial exhibits are bundled up for one admission price—$1 in the evening, 50 cents before noon.

Theatrical 'Firsts'

THE pier's history diggers produced many theatrical "firsts." Most amazing "first" in light of present-day developments was a pier-sponsored rocket-propelled aircraft in 1927.

A stunt man, Bill Swan, was sent aloft in a glider with a rocket attachment. Swan set off six rockets one by one to whoosh over the resort before landing at the Municipal Airport. Army Air Corps officers, training here during the war, expressed amazement when

Maryland's Eastern Shore Opens the Season Early

OCEAN CITY, MD., June 14.—Upsetting one precedent after another in the 73-year history of this seashore resort, businessmen and civic leaders opened the season this year with a special Easter program including a boardwalk sunrise and an Easter promenade in the afternoon. The crowds equaled in numbers and in spirit those of midsummer weekends in most seasons and surprised even the most enthusiastic proponents of the idea.

Following up the advantage gained by the early start, another innovation was arranged for Mother's Day, with special boardwalk ceremonies in which the 101 oldest mothers and the youngest mother were awarded corsages.

To keep apace in other directions, the mayor and council have been busy with a program of improvements unsurpassed for many years. Outstanding among these was the paving of all east-west streets from the boardwalk to Sinepuxent Bay and the hard-surfacing of all alleys. Other improvements include improved refuse collection, parking meters in the shopping district and the development of St. Louis ave. as another main thoroughfare paralleling Balti-

Lady Liberty a New Yorker, Surrounded by New Jersey

BEDLOE'S ISLAND, on which the Statue of Liberty stands, is part of New York State, but the water around it is part of New Jersey.

Seven families of National Park Service employes—20 persons—live on Bedloes Island. They vote and pay taxes in the Borough of Manhattan, New York City.

The sheet copper in the statue, which has a green patina from oxidation, is three-thirty-seconds of an inch thick, about the thickness of a silver dollar.

The statue weighs 225 tons, including 100 tons of copper and 125 tons of wrought-iron framework.

The head of the statue was first exhibited in Paris and the right arm and torch in Philadelphia, at the centennial of American Independence.

The statue, made up of more than 300 pieces of copper, first was assembled in Paris, two years before its New York dedication.

It was brought to the United States in crates aboard the bark-rigged French naval vessel Isere.

Gustave Eiffel, builder of the Eiffel Tower in Paris, designed the framework of the statue.

Upkeep of the Statue of Liberty, national monument, is budgeted at about $60,000 a year.

more and Philadelphia aves. and running to the city limits on the north.

The boardwalk has been overhauled and new wells are being driven to increase the city's water supply. The installation of overhead lighting on the new highway bridge over the Sinepuxent Bay is nearing completion.

Year-Round Planning

NUMEROUS building projects are under way or completed. Among the latter are small and large residences, apartments, stores and night clubs. Many of the new projects are designed toward development of the community as a year-round resort in keeping with the demand from sportsmen and home seekers. Several hostelries and guest homes also are converting properties for year-round occupancy.

Other developments include a baseball diamond for the newly formed town team and an airfield a mile and a half from the boardwalk which is ultimately intended to accommodate coastwise airliners. For this season, it is expected that only small land-based planes can be handled. Hickman Field, just across the bay, is arranging water taxi service for airborne visitors.

Even the fish have been conniving with the weather to bring a glow to the hearts of anglers. After a successful run of mackerel and trout, bluefish began appearing in greater numbers and at an earlier date than for several seasons. Surf fishing has not yet really come into its own.

DEEP sea fishing boat operators are working with the city administration to provide an array of prizes for the most successful anglers who prefer to get theirs the hard way. Boat captains who affiliate with the Ocean City Marlin Club will be authorized to fly the club's pennant. The trophies will be on display prior to their award in the fall.

Convention groups are vying for choice dates and two have already held their session—the Business and Professional Women's Clubs and the Maryland Council of the Knights of Columbus. Others scheduled are the Maryland Veterans of Foreign Wars and the League of Maryland Sportsmen, Inc., comprising 63 clubs throughout the State. The former will convene June 20-22 and the Sportsmen are here this weekend.

Another innovation is a summer stock company which is being organized for a program of nine recent New York hits played by a cast of New York actors supported by some local talent. Charles Christensen, producer, and Doug Hudelson, business manager, will stage the one week production in the auditorium of the Ocean City School.

Christensen was formerly with Norman Bel Geddes, Max Reinhardt, Robert Edward Jones, the Playwrights Co., and Max Gordon. Hudelson has been business manager for the Theater Guild and recently completed a tour with that group's production of "Henry VIII." Earlier he was with the Barter Theater at Abingdon, Va.

The idea of a summer theater has caught the public fancy and nearly the entire amount necessary to finance the project has been subscribed locally without any organized publicity.

The newly organized bureau of information, operating under the mayor and council, is performing most of the functions of a chamber of commerce. It reports many of the apartments and other accommodations booked clear through the season and urges prospective visitors to do some advance planning.

Starlight Operas

Starlight Operas will be presented by the San Diego Civic Light Opera Association July 9-20 and July 23 through August 3. La Jolla community tennis tournament runs July 16-20. Mission San Diego De Alcala's historical cavalcade and fiesta will take place July 13.

OWEN DAVIS says:
"Maine... best place in all the world for a tired man to rest."

"Others can talk about the beauty of Maine's coast, lakes and rivers, but to me it is the best place in all the world for a tired man to rest. About fifteen years ago we bought a cottage in Maine, and ever since have spent our summers there. I go to Maine feeling old as Rip Van Winkle, but as soon as our car draws up to our little cottage I leap back into my youth."

Owen Davis

Right, Mr. Davis, Maine is the place to rest and be restored. And it's great, too, for a vacation of activity—surf bathing, sailing, fishing, canoeing, hiking through a scenic countryside. Whatever you want in vacations, Maine has the answer, come this summer with all the family.

From Snake Dances to Scenic Grandeur

Southwest a Rich Vacation Lode

THE pursuit of early American history can take you to the Southwest just as easily as it can to Boston or Virginia.

The oldest Government building in the United States, built in 1610, stands in the heart of Santa Fé, New Mexico.

The Palace of the Governors has been kept as nearly as possible in its original condition.

Typical of early Spanish-Indian architecture, its front is flush with the street and at the back is a patio for shade and privacy. It is, of course, one-story and flat-roofed, in that early style which now proves to have been a direct ancestor of modern architecture.

The beams thrust from the walls near the top of the structure and extend the roof to the outer edge of the sidewalk, where it is supported by rough-hewn logs.

Fort to Museum

OF NECESSITY, the Palace, now a museum, has undergone many changes. Originally it was as much fort as palace, with soldiers' quarters, cavalry stables and parade grounds, as well as living quarters for the Governor, offices and council chambers and servants' quarters.

Originally it encompassed about two city blocks. In 1680 the Indians drove the Spaniards from New Mexico. They built a pueblo around three sides of the plaza, damaging the palace.

Retaken by the Spaniards in 1693, the palace was restored, but by 1810 it had become truly dilapidated. Restored then, it was the seat of government until 1885, when a modern capitol—not nearly so picturesque—was built in another section of the town. The Palace remained the Governor's residence, however, until 1909, when it became a museum.

It has since been restored still again.

An Ancient Ritual

FRAGMENTS of a history which preceded the white man in America will be on display for tourists in Prescott, Ariz., at sundown on August 10, when the Smoki people hold their annual ceremonials and snake dance.

Chief Half Moon and his council emerged single file from their underground kiva in April, having completed their incantations and searching of the heavens, to make known to the waiting tribesmen this auspicious date.

Runners were dispatched to bring together their "little brothers," the snakes, for the weird ritual in which they will convey to the snakes their prayers for rain, fertility and prosperity. The snakes will carry their supplications to the gods of the Smoki people who live in the depths of the Grand Canyon.

This will be the twenty-seventh annual presentation of the ceremonials. The dances are performed by a group of white men who have banded together to preserve the colorful religious ceremonies of their red-skinned brothers who inhabit the mesas and plains of the Southwest.

This is the Horse Tail Dance at Taos, New Mexico The dance is for a good crop of colts and success in horse-trading

ALSO in the Southwest is evidence of a geological history that makes man himself a Johnny-come-lately The Carlsbad Caverns in New Mexico and the Grand Canyon in Arizona are attractions for both lovers of beauty and students of the earth's evolution.

As an indication of the size of the caverns, consider the Big Room, which is a mile and a half from the entrance. It is almost 4000 feet long, and 625 feet wide in some places, with a ceiling height of 350 feet.

There are three main levels, the first 750 feet underground. This level is completely mapped, and is the one to which visitors are taken.

Seven miles of trails make up the sightseeing route.

At 900 feet there is a second level, and at 1320 feet a third. It is not yet known how far they extend under the Guadalupe Mountains.

Words Are Feeble

THE Grand Canyon, for color, scupture and breathtaking grandeur, is unsurpassable. While it does defy the powers of words to describe it, some can be tried on for size:

Cutting unbelievable thousands of feet down in front of you as you stand on the rim, and zigzagging away as far as the eye can follow, the canyon gapes like some ancient wound. All through it rise jagged pinnacles of rock.

Its colors shift with the light, now rust and gray, now beige and green, now purplish in a haze. Pine trees cling to its inaccessible cliffs, seeming to grow out of sheer rock, incredibly hardy against the buffeting of the elements.

You find that you have stood unmoving for long minutes, following the moment-by-moment change of panorama, watching the colors as they alter subtly, the clouds that hang now above, now below, the rim. And you realize that the breathless silence about you is not silence at all, but the sound of wind, a murmur one minute, a roar the next.

You have seen, you realize, an unforgetable spectacle—the long-ended but still-present torment of the world's birth.

Whatever Your Fun, New York'll Have It

NEW YORK's Department of Commerce is running a series of ads this summer asking, "What Kind of Vacationer Are You?" The ads then explain how the Empire State can appeal to the sightseer, water baby, camper, mountain addict, seashore fan, nightlifer, scenery lover, angler, shopper, hiker, sailor, theater-goer, touring-type, deep-sea fisherman and cowboy.

And from all evidence it's true.

In addition to its enchanting metropolis, with its museums, night spots, skyscrapers, shopping and radio centers and large-scale theater activity, the State offers a remarkable variety of al fresco entertainment.

The State's highest road, a seven-mile climb up Whiteface Mountain, 4872 feet above the sea, offers a marvelous panorama of the Adirondacks. Between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic, the State's many other "glamor spots" include Niagara, the Finger Lakes, the Catskills, Lake Chautauqua, Watkins Glen, Lake Placid, Thousand Islands, the Genesee country, Lake George, Saratoga, the Hudson, Mohawk, Delaware and Susquehanna valleys and Long Island beaches.

Bass Season Open

THE Adirondack region is popular with sportsmen. The State maintains in the Adirondack area more than 450 miles of trails, 130 lean to and 25 public camp sites.

North of the Adirondacks is the Thousand Islands—St. Lawrence region. More than 1700 wooded islands provide locations for summer homes and cottages.

The bass season gets under way tomorrow in the St. Lawrence, which is stocked each year from New York State hatcheries with small mouth black bass.

The Thousand Islands area is looking forward to its biggest season. Three hotels on the mainland, two club estates and a number of small hotels and boarding houses are already welcoming summer visitors to the playground on the United States-Canadian border.

The famous motorboats used by the islanders for speedy trips to the mainland are already buzzing, and the colorful sightseeing boats will be back in service this year. Some of the tours will include stops at Canadian communities where English china, silver and linens can be purchased.

Dotted With Lakes

NEW YORK'S second large mountain region, the Catskills, is a superb setting for the fishing, boating and hiking that attract thousands of summer residents. Popular summer colonies and hotels are found throughout the region.

Lake Champlain is the haunt of yachtsmen and fishermen. Lake George, the American "Lake Como," has been a leading summer resort for generations. In the central part of the State are the Finger Lakes. Chautauqua since 1874 has combined cultural opportunities with outdoors summer enjoyment. The Great Lakes, Erie and Ontario, are playgrounds for central and western New York. Watkins Glen is a famous beauty spot. Taughannock Falls, Chittenango Falls and the Genesee gorge are other attractions.

The Rose Festival at nearby Newark continues through July 4. The first Poughkeepsie Intercollegiate Rowing Regatta since before the war is set for June 21. The Gold Cup races of the American Power Boat Association take place in Jamaica Bay August 10.

New York's Taughannock Falls near the head of Cayuga Lake plunges 215 feet, the highest falls east of the Rockies

Gliding, one of New York State's more spectacular and unusual sports, got an early start at Elmira, with meets now under way. Other contests are scheduled at Ellenville in July and August.

The Saratoga racing season is in August.

Steel Pier's Half Century

told of the stunt, which drew little aeronautical interest at the time.

The pier was a springboard for many stage, screen and radio stars. The late W. C. Fields was a member of a minstrel show there in 1898. Bud Abbott and Lou Costello are the latest "big-time" graduates.

Alvin (Shipwreck) Kelly set a seven-week record in 1930 by sitting atop a pole above the pier's entrance. The circus gorilla, Gargantua, was known as "Buddy" on the pier as a youngster.

Other minstrel boys on the pier who made good later were Preston Foster, Raymond Hitchcock, Frank Tinney and Matt Wheeler.

SINCE 1931 the Nation's top-flight dance bands have been feature attractions. Last year's card included Benny Goodman, Sammy Kaye, Harry James and Vaughn Monroe.

On its vaudeville stage, the pier has presented Bob Hope, Kate Smith, Eddie Cantor, Betty Grable and Nelson Eddy and many other celebrities.

Gertrude Ederle was signed almost as soon as she came out of the English Channel back in the '20s. Tommy Farr, the English prizefighter, was an attraction after he carried Joe Louis to a 15-round decision. Last season curvaceous Jane Russell appeared during the three weeks her controversial picture "The Outlaw" was shown at the pier.

Nine-Day Cruises To Alaska Listed

Vancouver, June 14.—Nine-day cruises to Alaska by the famous "Inside Passage," a sheltered water route in the midst of magnificent scenery, are being featured by liners of the Canadian Pacific Railway's British Columbia Coast fleet.

From June to September the cruise ships Princess Norah and Princess Louise make six sailings a month out of Vancouver to Alaskan ports. Connections are made for side trips over the picturesque White Pass and Yukon route.

High Sierras Or High Life, On the Coast

HORACE GREELEY'S alleged admonition, "Go West, young man," might well apply to this summer's tourist, for the Far West is sending out intriguing bulletins.

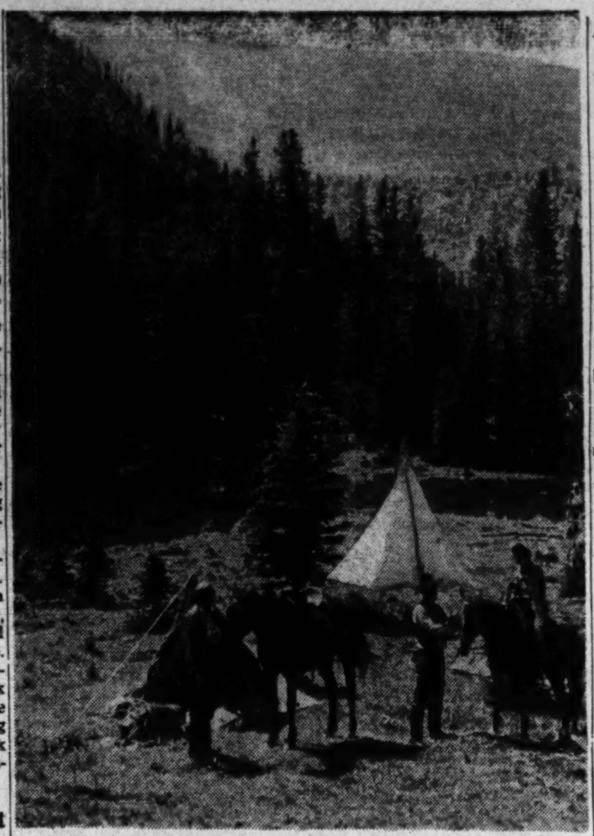
In Oregon alone, more than 100 events ranging from beauty pagents to roundups are on the schedule through December. Astoria's Salmon Drby will be held August 30; the Oregon Trail Pageant will be held at Eugene July 24 to 26 and the Coos Bay Pirates Regatta is scheduled for August 2 to 4.

Dropping down to California, the 602-foot Shasta Dam is receiving final touches and is ready for inspection by the tourist.

Southern California is also putting in its bid for the tourist trade. Summer opens the high Sierra trails for visits to Palisades Glacier, relic of the Ice Age and reached from the resort town of Big Pine. Other resort towns such as Independence and Bishop outfit pack trips into the higher country. The Inyo-Mono hunting and fishing country and Sequoia National Park vie with Hollywood as tourist attractions.

You Can See Southwest In Motion Pictures

A motion picture to stimulate travel interest in the American Southwest, being prepared by Trans World Airline, will picture scenic wonders such as Grand Canyon and Death Valley. The picture will emphasize available hotel and living accommodations. Considerable footage will be devoted to pack trips, hunting, fishing, dude ranching and rodeos.



These vacationists are breaking camp in the Anaconda-Pintlar Wilderness at Flower Lake in Deer Lodge National Forest, near Butte, Montana

Dredges Create Islands

Miami Building Lots Rise From Bay Bottom

MIAMI, Fla., June 14.—People are walking today where a year ago only boats sailed and fish swam. Miami area's 25 man-made islands, 22 inhabited, are a form of wizardry on the grand scale.

Hydraulic dredges have changed the face of Miami in the last quarter century—dredges costing from $50,000 to two million dollars, with 20-inch discharge pipes, working 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and with crews averaging 35 to 40 men.

Costing about $60 an hour to operate the dredges pump up between 3000 and 10,000 cubic yards a day at a cost of about $3500 an acre—unless the bottom is rock, when the many-toothed rotary cutter may encounter trouble and the cost may double.

In Miami, fortunately, rock is mainly about 12 feet below the bay bottom.

$1000 an Acre

YOU can watch dredges at work in several Miami districts, for six more islands are being pumped up, islands whose owners bought the land from the State at around $1000 an acre and obtained the necessary War Department permits for pumping; islands where a few months from now there will be streets and houses and families with children playing on well-landscaped lots.

If these man-created lands are of pumped-up rock, automobiles may drive over them and building begin as soon as the planned area is filled. If they are of sand, builders may have to allow the land to settle for a while. Some of the original islands in the Miami area stood for 11 years before building was begun.

Time was when the bulkhead, or seawall, was built first and the resultant area inside filled. Today, however, modern hydraulic pressure methods have changed all that. After construction of an earth dike to keep the land in and the necessary spillway to let the water out, bay bottom is pumped in, the bulkhead being built last.

Construction Is Simple

CONTRARY to general belief, homes on the average Miami island need not be built on foundation pile. If your choice is a bungalow, spread footing, or surface construction, is approved. Another fact not widely realized is that the bay itself benefits from this pumping, since channels are deepened, sometimes as much as 25 feet, to the satisfaction of both fisherman and boatman.

But one thing is certain. Spanish conquistadores, who probably also basked in Miami sunshine around these shores, would never know the old place now. They'd need a map to navigate around the islands man has built.

Largest Gold Camp

While in the Pikes Peak region, you can enjoy a visit to romantic Cripple Creek and Victor, habitat of the "hardy, hard rock miners." To date this largest gold camp in the world has mined more than 500 million dollars worth of gold.

Pennsylvania's Land Area More Than Half Forest

Harrisburg, Pa., June 14—Go anywhere in Pennsylvania and you can enjoy your favorite vacation pastime—fishing, golfing, hiking, swimming, boating, horseback riding, canoeing or camping.

More than 52 per cent of the State's land area is still in forest and nearly two million acres of forest land are owned and operated by the State for the free use and enjoyment of the people. More than 200 lakes of importance and hundreds of waterfalls add to scenic and aquatic joys. Deep forests lend enchantment.

There are many major historic shrines—Independence Hall, Valley Forge, Gettysburg, Fort Pitt, to mention but a few.

Jersey All Things To Most All Men

Early and late the sailboat is a lot of fun on Great Egg Harbor Bay at Ocean City, N. J.

Princeton's 200th anniversary celebration, and the revival of surfcasting at Sandy Hook, should give New Jersey just about the gamut of appeal to summer visitors this year.

The principal attractions, of course, will be the State's chain of seashore resorts, including Cape May with its famous Cape Theater, Asbury Park with its annual Baby Parade that you see in the newsreels, Wildwood and its steady procession of tournaments ranging from marbles to golf, and Ocean City, N. J., where the $2000 National Surfcasting Tournament will be held August 9.

Deep South Has Summer Attractions

THE Northerner's winter playgrounds, from Myrtle Beach all the way to Miami, more and more are becoming his summer playgrounds as well. Tourists have found the ocean a two-way air-conditioner that cools in July as it warms in January.

Myrtle Beach, South Carolina's largest oceanfront resort, this year has several new hotels and guest cottages, including the $300,000 Colonial Village Hotel. The Ocean Forest Hotel is also open on a yearly basis. Trotting and harness racing at nearby Washington Park, and Myrtle Beach State Park, are added attractions.

Pawley's Island, near Georgetown, is one of South Carolina's oldest resorts, having been popular in Colonial days. Farther down the coast in the Charleston area the principal ocean resorts are Folly Beach across the Ashley River and Sullivan's Island and the Isle of Palms across the Cooper River.

On picturesque Edisto Island, below Charleston, is Edisto Beach, where bait, boats and guides are available. A State park here boasts a mile and a half of splendid beach.

Near old moss-hung Beaufort, on the Intracoastal Waterway, are the hunting and fishing communities of Lady's Island and Hunting Island. Beaufort also is a sailing town and an annual regatta is held in July. At Walterboro, north of Beaufort, the newly-built fishing camp at Givhans Ferry State Park offers cabins and boats.

Up in South Carolina's Blue Ridge Mountains, the best known resort is Caesar's Head, 3115 feet above sea level.

A Dude Ranch Is Prescribed for the Stale

fast. I won't hurry, watch the clock or listen for bells. After orange juice, eggs and coffee, I'll go for a gallop in the hills. If I want to spend the afternoon reading in bed, no student can reach me to plead, "Please explain all these marks on my term paper."

About sundown a group will gather for a barbecue beside a sapphire blue lake, and afterward take a moonlight ride in the mountains, listening to echoes in the deep canyon as our steeds clomp along winding trails in the ghostly white light.

Other days will be spent hiking or picnicking, and I may do some colt-branding and target practice, or feed Wazee, the baby moose. I'll spend some evenings at country dances, but more beside radio or card table, or with a book in a long cushioned window seat. I'll play some ping-pong, but I'm no good at pool (don't have a misspent life).

On pack trails single file is the style and the male dudes and wranglers ride in front and behind the gal so that no bear will get to her. This is a party from Beaver Creek Ranch at Rimrock, Arizona

Chased by a Bear

MY dudeing began at Staples ranch, Story, Wyo., where I was chased by a bear in the Big Horns. We rode to nearby HF Bar ranch to see a rodeo.

Next summer I rode fence at Brockhurst ranch, Green Mountain Falls, Colo., taking part in a roundup and Bald Mountain steak suppers. Next a summer at Stead's ranch and hotel in Estes Park, Colo. This is more hotel than ranch, but it has horses. One quadruped took me around the Fern and Odessa Lake loop and to Boulder Field on Long's Peak.

At Mountain View ranch at Tererro, N. Mex., I enjoyed the cattle herding, peak trips and picnics among wild strawberries and columbines. That summer I went to El Tovar Inn on the rim of Grand Canyon. Cleo, a Missouri mare mule, toted me to the bottom. Next August I descended the almost perpendicular road from Raton to Red River, N. Mex., putting up at Mountain View Lodge.

We went mountain lion hunting one day. At night we sometimes danced the varsouvienne or rye waltz.

My next rendezvous was Mexico at Casa Blanca, dude ranch at the edge of Mexico City, I consumed weird-looking food and listened to intoxicating marimba music. I progressed to Taxco, retreat of artists and writers, went horseback to waterfalls and silver mines. Visiting a nightclub, I saw a cowboy feed a pet fox tequila lemonade.

Slept in a Bedsack

THE following summer, 1940, was spent at Parkhill Lazy B and Flathead ranches at Beehive, Mont. We had a week's pack trip, and I slept in a bedsack without benefit of tent roof. We climbed to a glacier and skated on the "pink snow"—the illusion is created by algae growing in it.

In 1941 I stayed at the Buckhorn ranch, Pincher Creek, Alberta, Can. Clifton Cross, proprietor, a Calgary business man, has learned to brand and handle his cattle. There we found wider open spaces than in the States. Canada has only one tenth the population. This leaves plenty of room for the moose, caribou, elk, deer and bear.

In 1942 I lived the life of a cowboy on the Focus ranch, northwest of Steamboat Springs, Colo., site of national ski races. We visited an ice cave, wrangled horses and punched cattle. This is a big beef-raising outfit. In 1943 I had one week at the private cattle ranch of Toy J. Turner at Sulphur, Okla. He is now governor of Oklahoma.

They Rival the Alps

I HIGH-TAILED it back to Focus in 1941, and in 1945 I spent five weeks at Moose Head ranch, Jackson Hole, Wyo. I slept beneath the sod without first being converted into a zombie—my cabin had a sod roof with flowers growing on top. This is one of the most beautiful spots on earth. If you can't afford Switzerland, go to Jackson Hole, to mountains of northern Idaho, Montana or somewhere in the Pacific northwest.

The Bitter Root Mountains near Elk City, Idaho, are said to rival the Alps. I camped near Indians, fished under Buffalo Hump, toured Frog Town, Concord and other ghost towns, watched a gold dredge work on the Clearwater, ate fish from "The River of No Return," and dined on steak from a tame cow's heifer calf nursed by a wild elk. I rope beneath the Hanging Tree, where 64 men were lynched in gold rush days.

If I ever get a winter vacation I'll spend it at the Triangle T ranch or diamond W ranch in Arizona, at Hidden Well ranch in Las Vegas, Nev., or La Paz Guest ranch, Palm Springs, Calif.

The Dude Ranch Has Moved East

Dude ranchers can show off their horse opera finery these days without crossing more than a couple of State lines. Pennsylvania has half a dozen Lazy Bar W's equipped with everything except a coyote's howl.

To ascend to culture, however, the Keystone State also has a dozen summer theaters, such historic shrines as Independence Hall, Valley Forge, Gettysburg, and Fort Pitt, and the Hershey Rose Gardens, with 33,000 plants of 750 varieties.

County; Holly River, in Webster County, and Droop Mountain, in Pocahontas County. State forests with vacation cabins are Seneca, in Pocahontas County; Cabwaylingo, in Wayne County; Kumbrabow, in Randolph County, and Greenbrier, in Greenbrier County.

Spruce Knob, highest point in West Virginia, 4800 feet above sea level, is reached over a Forest Service road leaving U. S. 33, near Judy Gap.

Fishing, as well as natural beauty, attracts many visitors to Blackwater Falls, near Davis, W. Va.

Two strikingly opposite scenic features in West Virginia are Blackwater Falls, near Davis, where Blackwater River drops over a 63-foot ledge at the head of rugged Blackwater Canyon, and Seneca Rocks, a gleaming mass of white Medina quartzite, 1000 feet high, at the junction of U. S. 33 and State Route 4.

July 4 'American Day' At St. Anne's Shrine

July Fourth will be "American Day" at the Shrine of Ste. Anne de Beaupre in Canada. Prominent among participants will be members of the first of eight 1947 national pilgrimages. Special devotions will be offered by shrine dignitaries.

The inclusive dates for this summer's initial mission to the shrine are June 29 to July 5. Two days will be devoted to trips to the basilica, and three days to a cruise of the picturesque Saguenay River.

The dates for the second pilgrimage are July 6 to 12. The remaining six journeys will begin each Sunday from July 27 through August 31.

Reservations for all eight pilgrimages are being received at 1414 F st. nw.

New Jersey Offers Gingerbread Castle

Parents with children touring New Jersey resorts and historic associations this summer can delight the little ones by a visit to Hamburg in Sussex County. Here is Gingerbread Castle, a fairy tale castle of gingerbread with a sugar-frosted roof, icing turrets, marble-cake walls, sugar windows, and a candy stick tower. Iit is a replica of the Witch House in Hansel and Gretel fairy tales. In it is a "huge cauldron" with capacity for thirty children at a time.

Kentucky Lake Boasts 2200 Miles of Shore

The newly completed 114 million dollar Kentucky Dam, a TVA project, has created Kentucky Lake, a tremendous body of water which stretches back of the dam 184 miles to Pickwick Dam near the Alabama line. It has a shore line of 2200 miles, and covers 158,000 acres. It contains scenic public parks, beaches and facilities for the vacationist. Tourists may now cruise the entire lake on the Chattanooga summer cruises of Greene Line steamers which sail out of Cincinnati.

IS THE HORSE HERE TO STAY?

Any dude will tell you the horse is the greatest invention of all time—perfect way to enjoy the scenery at guest ranches in Montana, Wyoming or Washington. Best way to go: NORTH COAST LIMITED, which also serves Yellowstone and Rainier parks and the Pacific Northwest. Escorted tours all through the West. Or if you want a sea trip, take an Alaskan or Inside Passage cruise from Seattle (as low as $54.68 for 7 days, 1,000 miles). Send for free booklets describing trips by train, ship or horseback. And speaking of horses . . .

Here's the latest in horsepower! These five new Northern Pacific freight diesels pack 30,000 H. P. under their hoods. They're 200-footers—with ample muscle to hustle mile-long loads at express speeds, or scale mile-high mountains. Working with them on the Main Street of the Northwest are sleek new N. P. passenger diesels, pulling the North Coast Limited. Main Street keeps making news—big news to people of the 7 states we serve, to others who visit or do business with the West.

YOUR summer trip will be even more delightful if you go on The Milwaukee Road's new OLYMPIAN HIAWATHAS. This glorious Speedliner service will operate on a schedule that saves half a day to the Montana Rockies, a full night and part of a day to Puget Sound.

All equipment for the new OLYMPIAN HIAWATHAS, except the all-room sleeping cars, will be ready for summer travel. You'll particularly like the diagonal seating dining car and the smart Tip Top Grill car with dining and lounging facilities. The Touralux sleeping cars bring new luxury with economy, and we're painting the lily by further improving the famous Hiawatha coaches.

NOW there is service daily on the electrified OLYMPIAN between Chicago and the Pacific Northwest.

Europe Says It's Okay to Come Now

250,000 visitors at one time, are all brushed and waiting for Americans this year.

Food is plentiful according to the Swiss national travel office, and is uniformly well prepared. Prices are higher than before the war, but it is still possible to live cheaper States. Hotel accommodations, in-States. Hotel accommodiations, including meals, run from $4 to $10 a day.

An entry visa, valid for three months in Switzerland, can be secured immediately at no charge from any Swiss consulate or the legation here in Washington.

Swiss Train Fares Low

AMERICAN tourists can now exchange $200 a week to Swiss francs at the official rate. Children are allowed $100 a week.

Switzerland has fast, clean trains; 90 per cent electric. Fares are low, due in part to special 8, 15 and 30-day holiday tickets good for any number of trips on the Swiss federal railroads and lake steamers.

There is good air service from other European capitals. TWA, American Airlines and Pan American have regular schedules direct to Geneva.

Switzerland offers, French, Italian and German speaking districts. Honeycombed with high altitude resorts, Switzerland has the loftiest hotel in the world on the Jungfraujoch, where you can ski in July.

Tourist Paradise

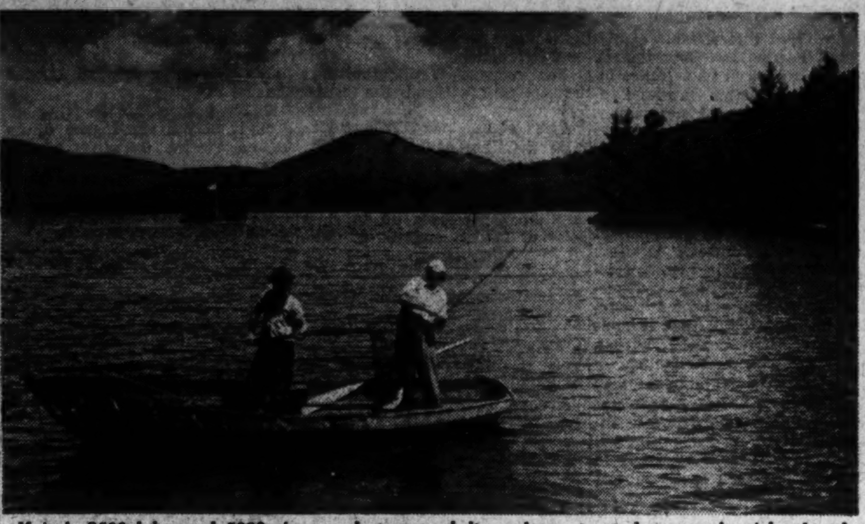
LUXEMBOURG is practically a tourist paradise. Pensions offer sleeping accommodations and three meals for as little as $6 a day. Hotel rooms are $3 and a good meal costs $2. Food prices are stabilized and there is no rationing.

Most of the dishes are French in origin but some are distinctly local. There is an abundnace of dry white wine, or liqueurs, such as Kirsch, Prunelle, Mirabelle and Quetsch.

Luxembourg, which already knows Americans through the GI's on duty in Germany who come there for weekend visits, claims to have made comparatively fast recovery since its economy is divided between agriculture and steel mills.

The Grand Duchy is about the size of Rhode Island and is populated by 300,000 persons. It has mountains and fertile valleys with rivers well stocked for fishermen, medieval castles and modern buildings.

Maine—The Fisherman's Paradise



Maine's 2500 lakes and 5000 rivers and streams shelter salmon, trout, bass, perch, pickerel and offer a stern challenge to the nimrod looking for a scrap

Before departing, United States car owners must obtain a gasoline letter of credit from the AAA or the American Automobile Touring Alliance. No gas allocation is made to foreigners who use rented private cars registered in France. Second-hand cars bought currently in France get no gas rations.

French National Tourist Offices at 610 Fifth ave., New York, can furnish other information about travel to or within France, including two free booklets, "France Says Come," and "Maps of France."

Holland's Tulips

HOLLAND has "bounced back to normal." The 10,000 acres of magnificent tulips bloomed this year. They are a 23-million-dollar industry to 100,000 Hollanders. The multicolored blossoms, lined up with military precision, attract thousands of visitors..

Canal boats, poled through the bulb fields, achieve a kind of Venetian effect. (It is said many Germans were dunked and some drowned in the canals during "courting" sessions.)

Every bulb is raised with meticulous care. It's a solid year's work, fertilizing, culling, shipping, planting, covering the ground with straw. Front lawns of Dutch homes are adorned with floral displays. Subjects include "paintings" of the American Flag criss-crossed with the Dutch flag, birds and wooden shoes. All are comprised of petals pulled from tulips, narcissus, hyacinths and lilacs. Children carry them home in baskets to make the clever, colorful lawn displays.

Do you see windmills in Holland's tulip area? Hardly ever. Do Dutchmen wear wooden shoes? Perhaps 1 in 1000 do. They dress just like Yankee farmers.

The German's stole 60 per cent of Holland's bicycles. Still there is an endless procession of them. Special bike roads parallel every highway.

The Hollanders are friendly; they admire Americans and jabber ear-catching Yankee phrases.

The Nile Beckons

EGYPT IS eager for tourists. Egyptian Hotels, Ltd., claims ample accommodations, but reservations must be made two weeks in advance. Trans-World, American Overseas Airlines and Pan American Airways fly you in.

Food is good and plentiful and the trains are air-cooled. Beside archeological sights, the land of the Nile offers horse racing, golf, polo, bathing and deep-sea fishing.

There are many pensions in Cairo with rates for room and board at $100 a month. The best charge about $4.20 per day for a single room, $7.80 double.

Busy Montreal Is Metropolis of Great Contrasts

Montreal, one of the oldest cities in North America, is a bustling modern metropolis of 1,300,000 people.

It's the second largest French-speaking city in the world, but has remained loyal to the British connection for 185 years.

It's a city of contrasts. You can go three blocks south from the financial heart of Canada, teeming St. James st., and find yourself in crooked St. Paul st., the "main stem" of the French regime. Here 200-year-old buildings crowd the narrow sidewalks, and perhaps the rattle of wheels on cobblestones will be drowned out by the roar of a 20,000-ton liner heading downstream for Europe.

On Place d'Armes stands the statue of Paul de Chomedy de Maisonneuve, who founded the settlement of Ville Marie in 1642. The statue faces the famous church of Notre-Dame-de-Montreal and the 263-year-old Seminary of St. Sulpice. In typically Montreal style, the other three sides of the square are lined by modern office buildings.
